Pig, poultry bills move ahead

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

Follow the bills

BOISE – As promised, legislators are working overtime to put laws on the books to help control what many believe will a Pandora's Box of filth and stench.

Some lawmakers cringe at the thought of 50,000 sows producing more than 1 million piglets each year in their districts, as one farm proposed for eastern Cassia County would. They're afraid if they open the door to one facility, there will be many more to follow.

But there's not much they can do about it except regulate the controversial operations as best they can. It's illegal to outright refuse their entry into the state as many would like. Besides, the thought of banning any business – especially during the current hard times for the ag industry – goes against the grain of the Republican-dominated Statehouse.

Along those lines, no less than four bills dealing with large-scale pig and poultry factories are currently working their way through the Statehouse. All, except one, would immediately enhance the rules adopted by the Division of Environmental Quality last fall and have since been adopted by lawmakers as permanent regulations for the industries. The exception would toss out the DEQ rules in favor of further study and more stringent rules.

• Senate Bill 1514
Sponsored by Senate Minority

Livestock operations face regs

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

BOISE – While pigs and chickens take up a large portion of the Legislature's time this winter, other farm animal industries are getting a share of the attention as well.

Cattle operations – both beef and dairy – are the subject of legislation and a number of ideas working their way through the Statehouse aimed at making those industries more environmentally conscious.

• Beef Cattle – Senate Bill 1398
A measure sponsored by Sen. Don Burtenshaw, R-Terreton, that would increase the level of compliance for beef animal feeding operations is currently being amended by the Senate and will likely receive a favorable vote when comes back to the Senate floor. The bill, which was drafted by the Idaho Cattlemen's Association as a proactive measure, Burtenshaw said, would consolidate existing state and federal environmental requirements in the Idaho Department of Agriculture.

Burtenshaw is the vice-chairman of the Senate Agricultural Affairs Committee.

The bill would provide outlines for the design and construction for new and modified beef cattle animal feeding operations, would require nutrient management plans for all operations, prohibit unauthorized discharges from sites and provide for enforcement.

Currently, regulation of the industry is handled by the Department of Ag, the Department of Health and Welfare and the Divison of Environmental Quality, a division of Health and Welfare.

"They would like to deal with one entity instead of dealing with all three," Burtenshaw said.

The general consensus at the Statehouse and the ag industry is that the Department of Ag is better suited for conducting required inspections, because the it has the personnel and equipment required because it has been testing dairies through a memorandum of understanding between the Department of Ag, Health and Welfare and DEQ.

"That has been a good thing," Burtenshaw said of the agreement for dairies. Because of the increased number of inspections the shift would cause, the first year of the arrangement would cost taxpayers a maximum of $263,000, while subsequent years would cost $198,000 annually.

Elko County will remove giant shovel

By Karen Terrell
Times-News correspondent

What's next

Commissioners will discuss the future of the large shovel [illegible] at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Elko County Courthouse. The agenda also includes a complete accounting of how much county money has been spent on the South Canyon Road issue. The meeting is open to the public.

Meanwhile, the new supervisor of the Humbolt-Toiyabe National Forest says he won't rule out rebuilding the road. For more, please see page C4.

ELKO, Nev. – The 28-foot giant shovel – the symbol of the so-called "Jarbidge Rebellion" – will have to be removed from the courthouse lawn, Elko County Manager George Boucher says.

And even so, the shovel might have left its mark on the courthouse lawn – since a water line might have been damaged when the shovel was placed on the lawn.

The shovel lists the names of people who support Elko County's planned stand against the federal government, and support a plan to reopen the South Canyon Road near Jarbidge on July 4.

Elko County has no written policy in place regarding monuments on the courthouse lawn, Boucher said.

But the subject suddenly came to light at the most recent commissioners' meeting when Elko resident Jan King asked commissioners what process was followed to allow the shovel on the courthouse lawn in the first place.

Commission Chairman Roberta Skelton said the commission had "informally agreed" to allow the display, but the matter was never an agenda item.

King, in turn, asked commissioners if one other individuals and groups could put up their own monuments, expressing their own views. King also questioned the legality of using the shovel to raise money for a special interest, such as the reopening of Jarbidge's South Canyon Road.

Boucher said no one had approached the county administration about putting the shovel up on the courthouse lawn and he did not know anything about it until two days before it appeared.

"It was a spontaneous movement which started in Montana, and gained support here," he said, referring to the "Shovels of Solidarity" movement.

Supporters from throughout the West sent shovels to Elko County to show support for the county's stand against the U.S. Forest Service, which maintains reopening South Canyon Road can damage habitat for endangered bull trout.

Official: Don't ban Net taxes

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – It is critically important to keep the Internet from becoming a tax haven for Web entrepreneurs seeking tax breaks not available to traditional bricks-and-mortar stores, Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers said Wednesday.

Lawrence Summers

Summers also indicated in an Associated Press interview that President Clinton was ready for a veto fight with the Republican-controlled Congress over various tax relief bills which the administration believes would cut too deeply into future budget surpluses.

Summers' comments on the Internet reflect an effort by the administration to find a middle ground between one group, which includes GOP presidential candidate John McCain, who has called for the Internet to be totally tax-free, and state and local government officials who want to tap into revenues being generated by the fastest-growing part of the economy.

"There should not be any penalty taxes on the Internet, but at the same time cyberspace should not become a tax haven that promotes evasion or avoidance of the basic taxes in our system," Summers said.

A commission headed by Republican Gov. James Gilmore of Virginia is studying the Internet tax issue and is due to release its recommendations in April. A federal law placing a temporary moratorium on taxes aimed specifically at the Internet will expire in October 2001.

LOS ANGELES – Carlos Santana, who first gained fame a generation ago with a searing guitar performance at Woodstock, won seven Grammys Wednesday for his comeback album "Supernatural."

Each of the 52-year-old guitarist's victories came for a track from "Supernatural," a multi-platinum album that included "Smooth," his first No. 1 single.

With the best album trophy still to be awarded, Santana had a chance to tie Michael Jackson's 1983 record of most Grammys on a single night, eight.

"Smooth" was named record and song of the year.

Prison riot ends in death

Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO, Calif. – Guards opened fire on warring inmates in an exercise yard at Pelican Bay State Prison on Wednesday, killing one prisoner and wounding 12 others before the racially tinged incident ended with the facility in complete lockdown.

State prison officials said 35 other prisoners at Pelican Bay were stabbed or otherwise injured in the fighting that erupted about 9:30 a.m. in the "B" yard, where some of the state's toughest convicts are housed. The prison, which is on 270 acres of forest land 20 miles south of the Oregon state line, currently holds 3,300 inmates.

California Corrections Director Cal Terhune described the brief, furious episode as "one of the most serious incidents in the past three decades." T he dead inmate, identified only as a Latino male, was the first to be shot to death by guards in nearly two years.

No correctional officers were injured.

Ever since it opened in 1989, billed as a triumph of high-tech prison architecture, the facility has been at the center of controversy.

In 1995, a federal judge ordered a series of reforms after testimony in a class-action civil-rights lawsuit showed that brutality had spilled into the prison's "A" and "B" yards. At the time, guards had shot and killed prisoners engaged in fistfights.

Attorney Kristin McQueary, who represents the county in the South Canyon Road dispute, said she was unsure about the legal aspects of the shovel monument. McQueary also wasn't sure whether commissioners violated the state's open meeting law when they decided amongst themselves to allow the monument.

Boucher said he understood the display was never intended to be a permanent fixture on the lawn, and said it's time to find a new place for it. Commissioner Mike Nannini said a few weeks ago that he would like to see the shovel be permanently placed in Jarbidge during the South Canyon Road reopening.

Boucher said the commission needs to find another site before the summer. With warmer temperatures on the way, lawn crews might have difficulty maintaining the lawn. He said the courthouse's irrigation system might have been damaged when one of its water lines was punctured with a stake when the shovel was mounted on the lawn.

being looked over by the Senate Agriculture Affairs Committee, would require nutrient management plans for the dairy industry.

Sponsored by Senate Assistant Majority Leader John Sandy, R-Hagerman, the measure would stipulate that plans be approved by the Department of Agriculture, would set a deadline for submitting the plans and would require all new dairies or dairies that change management to have plans in place before milking permits are awarded.

Grammys

Santana didn't earn a trophy for song of the year, which went to the writers, Rob Thomas – who sings it – and Itaal Shur.

Another nominee whose career began in the 1960s, Cher, won her first Grammy for dance recording. She enjoyed her biggest commercial success last year with the hit single "Believe."

In a mild upset, Christina Aguilera beat out her fellow teen queen and former Mousketeer, Britney Spears, for the Grammy as best new artist. Even she was surprised. "Oh my God, you guys," she said. "I seriously do not have a speech prepared whatsoever. I'm shaking right now."

Feuding soul divas TLC picked up two Grammys – for best rhythm 'n' blues performance by a group for their frank put-down of men, "No Scrubs," and best R&B album for "Fanmail." "No Scrubs" was also named best R&B song.

Sting sprang an upset in the male pop vocal category with a victory for "Brand New Day," beating out younger, Latin-influenced singers Marc Anthony and Ricky Martin. Sting also won for pop album. "I felt the talent I was up against was extraordinary," said Sting, who also won for pop album.

CAFO

Leader Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum, one measure currently before the Senate Ag Affairs Committee, proposes a one-year ban on the operations so lawmakers can gather more information about the operations and strengthen the DEQ rules.

"The rules just don't go far enough," Stennett said. The senator referred to the afternoon-long debate in front of a joint meeting of germane committees on the topic of the DEQ's rules, in which Ron Achs, who is the force behind Big Sky Farms, the company looking to locate the farm in Cassia County, gave basically the only testimony enthusiastic about the adoption of the rules.

"When the proprietor of the operation is the only one is ready for the rules to be adopted, I don't like it," said Stennett.

Stennett would like to see a moratorium put in place so an interim committee can study the issue further. Hopefully stronger rules addressing siting and stronger financial assurances that companies can afford to operate the overhead-laden plants through bonds and measures to ensure the personal liability of the farm's operators in case something goes wrong would be the result, he said.

"We need to make sure we are protected," Stennett said. "We need to make sure the state of Idaho is ready for these things."

Stennett's bill is currently under discussion in the Senate Resources and Environment Committee, which is chaired by Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly.

• Senate Bill 1478

A new version of a bill already endorsed by the State Health and Welfare Committee has been drafted by Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo. The bill, which provides option guidelines to help counties site industrial hog farms, was redrafted to remove duplication of some of the DEQ rules.

"All the principals are still the same," Darrington said.

The measure affects farms with 20,000 animal units or more. An animal unit is two and a half pigs weighing 55 pounds or more, or 10 weaned pigs each weighing 55 pounds or less. For poultry operations an animal unit is equal to 100 birds.

Darrington's bill provides for location guidelines and site certification, a site certification procedure, standards for standards for design, operation and closure of facilities, requirements for water quality protection, financial assurance for facility closure and remediation, site specific permit conditions, stipulations for violations and enforcement and procedures for declaring an emergency.

The bill also calls for a panel consisting of members appointed by county commissioners and city councils involved, and three state agencies.

The bill will come before the Senate Health and Welfare Committee today, of which Darrington is the chairman.

• Senate Bill 1436

Citing inadequate environmental measures for the disposal of dead animals from large scale confined animal feeding operations, a bill before the Senate Ag Affairs Committee would authorize the administrator of the Division of Animal Industries in the Department of Health and Welfare to regulate the procedure.

The measure states that the improper disposal of animal carcasses can result in the spread of disease and can contaminate the environment.

Drafted by the Department of Agriculture, the measure should reach the floor of the Senate for a vote later this week or early next week.

• Proposed bill for financial guarantees

The House Agricultural Affairs Committee, chaired by Rep. Doug Jones, R-Filer, increases the financial responsibility for swine and poultry operations.

The measure allows the director of the DEQ, which will regulate the pig and chicken factories, to retain a financial assurance bond put up as collateral against environmental damage created by the facilities for five years after the close of the farm. It also gives local county commissions the authority to impose more strict financial obligations than the DEQ rules require and gives counties the option of determining when such a facility is actually closed as long as their standards are at least as strict as those set forth by DEQ.

"They can ask for stronger assurance if they want to," said Jones, the sponsor of the bill. "What the DEQ does will be the minimum they can work with."

Marines might follow French troops to Kosovo

WASHINGTON (AP) – France is sending 600 to 700 more troops to help quell the rising violence in a divided city in northern Kosovo, and the United States may send in a Marine unit, U.S. and French officials said Wednesday.

"We have already decided" to dispatch a French Army battalion to the city of Kosovska Mitrovica, in a part of Kosovo controlled by French peacekeepers, French Defense Minister Alain Richard said at a news conference with William Cohen, the U.S. defense secretary.

Related story – C8

Cohen said no decision has been made on whether more American troops would go. But a senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a Marine Expeditionary Unit was on standby for possible movement into the French sector of Kosovo.

The rising tensions in Mitrovica over the past three weeks prompted the North Atlantic Council, NATO's governing body, to call a special meeting for Friday in Brussels, Belgium, to discuss Kosovo, the southern province of Serbia from which Yugoslav forces were pushed by a NATO bombing campaign last spring.

A U.S. official said Army Gen. Welsey Clark and the German general in charge of the NATO peacekeeping operation in Kosovo had requested three additional NATO battalions for the French sector. That would be roughly 1,800 to 2,000 soldiers, in addition to the approximately 30,000 NATO troops in all of Kosovo now.

Richard said France immediately would dispatch one battalion. NATO authorities were to meet later this week to decide how to allocate the other two battalions Clark said are needed to control the ethnic violence.

Senate weighs fetus protection bill

WASHINGTON (AP) – A bill that would make harming a fetus during a violent act a federal crime is a "flawed federal response" to assaults against women, the Clinton administration told the Senate Judiciary Committee Wednesday.

While Republicans continued to push the measure as "only just," abortion rights supporters viewed it as an election-year stalking horse for abortion opponents. "We owe this country a serious response, not debate on ideological proposals that ignore effective programs designed to help women crime victims," said Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the senior Democrat on the Senate panel.

New York City police officer Sean Carroll listens to jury instructions Wednesday in the Albany County Courthouse in Albany, N.Y.

Jury mulls racially charged shooting case

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) – The jury began deliberating Wednesday in the case of four white police officers charged with killing an unarmed black man, after the judge said the jurors could acquit if they believed the officers acted in self-defense.

The officers could be cleared if jurors believe their claim that they fired 41 bullets at Amadou Diallo because they thought he had a gun and wanted to shoot them, Justice Joseph Teresi said. "A person who acts in self-defense is not guilty of any crime," he said.

The judge spent more than three hours going over the legal instructions for each of 24 criminal counts before deliberations began.

He gave the jurors the option of considering charges other than murder, and told them the law allows police officers to stop and question someone if wrongdoing is suspected.

"You should figuratively put yourselves in the shoes of each defendant and consider how the situation appeared to him," the judge said. "You should consider what Amadou Diallo did before or during the encounter."

Earlier, Teresi replaced a female juror for talking about the case outside of court. The jury is now composed of four black women, one white woman and seven white men.

Sean Carroll, 37, Edward McMellon, 27, Kenneth Boss, 28, and Richard Murphy, 27, each have pleaded innocent to second-degree murder. They face a maximum prison sentence of 25 years to life if convicted.

Lesser charges being considered include second-degree manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide, which could result in a sentence of probation.

The defendants were members of a roving unit of New York City plainclothes officers that has been accused of stopping and frisking young black men without cause. Diallo's slaying sparked such intense publicity and so many protests that the case was moved to Albany.

Prosecutors allege that Diallo, 22, was accosted in the vestibule of his Bronx apartment building on Feb. 4, 1999, without warning or justification. He was hit 19 times.

The defense claims Diallo ignored the officers' repeated orders to halt and pulled out a black object in a threatening manner. It turned out to be a wallet.

Assisted suicides rise following new Oregon law

SALEM, Ore. (AP) – Twenty-seven terminally ill Oregonians, mostly older cancer patients, used the nation's only assisted suicide law to end their lives in 1999, up from 16 the year before.

Oregon health officials said reports from doctors and patients' families indicate the people who used the state's Death with Dignity Act did so out of a desire to have some control over the way they die.

"Although concern about possible abuses persist, our data indicate that poverty, lack of education or health insurance, and poor care at the end of life were not important factors in patients' requests for assistance with suicide," the officials said in a report published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Opponents of Oregon's law say it is immoral to have doctors assist in suicides. An effort is under way in Congress to derail it and to prevent other states from passing similar laws.

First approved in 1994 and reaffirmed by Oregon voters in 1997, the law allows a doctor to prescribe a lethal dose of barbiturates to patients who have less than six months to live.

Although backers of assisted suicide said the new report shows the law is working as intended, opponents said the report is flawed.

One critic, Dr. William Breitbart, chief of psychiatry service at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, suggested that doctors might withhold reports on assisted suicides that do not go well.

Dr. Gregory Hamilton of Physicians for Compassionate Care said the report failed to mention a case in which a man who intentionally took a lethal dose was resuscitated by emergency medical crews because his wife didn't want him to die. Hamilton declined to provide specifics.

Greenspan urges restraint with surplus

WASHINGTON (AP) – Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan made another appeal to lawmakers Wednesday to hold off committing projected government surpluses to new programs, at least until better predictions are available.

"All I say, all I'm asking in effect, is just to delay for a while until we have a better grip on what the true balance in the federal government accounts is," Greenspan said.

The chairman of the nation's central bank was answering questions in an appearance before the Senate Banking Committee to deliver the Fed's semiannual report to Congress.

Greenspan said that Fed policymakers are taking a cautious approach to the nation's unprecedented economic boom – remarks that have put financial markets on notice that another interest rate increase is likely soon.

On Wednesday, the Dow Jones average of industrial stocks fell about 79 points to close at 10,225.73, compared with a sharp 250-point drop Friday that followed Greenspan's House testimony.

The Fed chairman said he expects the economy to remain strong and noted that Americans at all income levels are benefitting from the current prosperity.

"The distribution of income, which had been increasingly skewed to the upper incomes through most of the 1980s and 1990s stopped in the middle of the decade and everybody has been growing by the same amount," he said.

Meanwhile, inflation is still largely absent. "I can't find it no matter where I look, with the possible exception of oil prices," Greenspan said.

GOP leaders criticize campaign

Party believes Bush will prevail despite poor political tactics

WASHINGTON (AP) – Shaken by defeat, Republican leaders allied with George W. Bush strongly criticized his campaign tactics Wednesday and warned that rival John McCain is a serious threat to the hobbled GOP front-runner.

Governors, fund-raisers and ranking GOP officials second-guessed Bush and his strategists in the aftermath of McCain's sweep of Michigan and Arizona in Tuesday primaries. The complaints ranged from his decision to visit a conservative South Carolina university – which one governor called "stupid" – to the $1 million TV ad campaign in McCain's home state.

"I think there's a learning curve happening right now in terms of running a national campaign," said Chris DePino, chairman of the Connecticut Republican Party and a staunch Bush supporter.

The allies said they still believe Bush will prevail in upcoming primaries. "When it comes down to it, and they actually have to choose a nominee and a president, voters are going to be looking for the guy who had done stuff and not just look at the slogans and a lot of rah rah," said Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee. "That's when Governor Bush will prevail."

But their willingness to critique the campaign underscores a growing concern about the candidate they anointed a front-runner long before the first votes were cast.

McCain, meanwhile, crowed about his "overwhelming and phenomenal victory" during a Washington state swing, as both campaigns drew up strategies for a two-week stretch of contests in 16 states and four American territories.

Republicans were hit with the stark realization Wednesday that they may be in for a long, expensive race that could produce a weakened nominee.

"There's a lot of people who signed on early with Gov. Bush who are wondering why this is going on so long," said New Hampshire party chairman Steve Duprey.

The sentiment was echoed throughout GOP circles, as the fallout from the Michigan defeat engulfed Bush's closest allies.

Several said his visit to Bob Jones University, renown for anti-Catholic sentiments, gave McCain an issue in Michigan and several other primary states with large Catholic populations.

"I think it was stupid," Connecticut Gov. John Rowland said.

Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, one of Bush's closest allies, questioned why the Texan spent $1 million to air TV ads in Arizona. Bush lost the state by nearly a 2-to-1 margin, though McCain didn't air any ads.

"You want to play in every state and show that you're a national candidate, but obviously a sitting senator's home state is not a place you want to invest many resources," Keating said.

DePino, one of Bush's early fund-raisers, sighed loudly into the telephone when the subject of Arizona spending came up. "I just wish I had a little more input on how they directed some of this money," he said.

Bush struggled to defend the Arizona spending, telling reporters, "I never expected to win Arizona. It was just part of our overall strategy."

Bush's fast-spending ways are a constant complaint now that public records show that McCain has narrowed his financial advantage.

McCain strengthens claim for White House

By Ben Stocking

Analysis

PHOENIX – Sen. John McCain limped into Michigan, but he leaves walking on air.

In the aftermath of McCain's twin wins Tuesday in Michigan and Arizona, Republicans across the nation may suffer a bout of second-guessing about their party's presidential race. The fundamental premise of front-runner Texas Gov. George W. Bush's presidential campaign was that he was the most electable Republican candidate, the guy who could beat the Democrats next fall.

Now that premise is questionable.

By bouncing back from defeat in South Carolina and overcoming long odds in Michigan, where Bush spent more money and enjoyed the support of the entire Republican Party establishment from Gov. John Engler on down, McCain strengthened his claim that he can assemble a broad coalition that can drive the Democrats from the White House next fall.

As he had in New Hampshire and South Carolina, McCain drew extraordinary support from Democrats and independents, who were permitted to vote in Michigan's open GOP primary and who gave him his margin of victory. McCain has aggressively courted such voters to expand the GOP base.

Democrats and independents flocked to McCain despite his consistently conservative record in Congress. They were drawn to the Arizona senator, they said, because they believe he is a man of integrity who tells the truth.

Many voters also say they are drawn by McCain's heroism as a stoic prisoner of war in Vietnam for more than five years, and by his reform crusade against special interests in Washington.

Even before the television networks called the election Tuesday night, Bush was arguing that McCain's Michigan victory is tarnished because it came on the strength of Democratic and independent votes.

Nevertheless, McCain's Michigan triumph injected badly needed adrenaline into his long-shot insurgency. Once again, he has what every presidential candidate craves: momentum.

He needs all the momentum he can get as the race heads to North Dakota, Virginia and Washington state next Tuesday and then into the "Super Tuesday" primaries March 7, when voters in California, New York and 10 other states will elect about 60 percent of the delegates needed for the Republican presidential nomination.

The Arizona maverick suffered a brutal beating only Saturday at the hands of South Carolina's Republican loyalists, especially Christian conservatives, who pushed Bush to an 11-point victory.

Michigan was much more fertile territory for McCain. Only 15 to18 percent of GOP Michigan voters call themselves Christian conservatives, according to Mike Murphy, a top strategist for McCain, but 40 to 45 percent of Republicans in South Carolina embrace that label.

Momentum is the lifeblood of McCain's campaign. With Bush enjoying a tremendous national advantage in money and organized support from party leaders, McCain's strategy relies on escalating the attention and popularity generated by successive victories, state by state.

He still faces long odds. Bush has shattered all presidential fund-raising records and has won endorsements from Republican heavyweights across the nation. The Texas governor holds a significant organizational advantage in most states that have yet to vote, and many of them do not permit independents or Democrats to participate in GOP primaries.

"McCain is backed into a corner now," said Bill Moore, a professor of political science at the College of Charleston in South Carolina. "Can you win the Republican nomination by depending on independents and Democrats? The answer is probably no."

But a USA Today/Gallup poll released Tuesday showed McCain enjoying a far bigger edge than Bush when the two candidates are pitted against Vice President Al Gore, the front-runner in the race for the Democratic nomination. The survey found McCain led Gore by 59 to 35 percent, while Bush topped Gore by only 50 to 45 percent.

Former President George Bush once referred to political momentum as "The Big Mo." Right now, his son doesn't have it.

Candidates voice stance over educational funding

The Associated Press asked the presidential candidates: Should federal money for education be linked to how well students perform on national or statewide tests?

On the issues: Student testing

Democrats

Bill Bradley: "We shouldn't send billions of dollars to the states without making sure that there are qualified teachers in every classroom and federal dollars are actually helping children to learn. I would require that schools receiving federal Title I funds (aid to help disadvantaged students) make measurable yearly progress toward raising student achievement in reading and math on statewide tests so that all children are performing at grade level within 10 years. Extra funds would go to schools that fail to make such progress, and persistently low-performing schools would be given new leadership or closed down and reopened as charter schools. Parents of children in non-performing schools could send their kids to higher performing public schools."

Al Gore: "I believe that federal money should be used to reward success and to support what works. I am pleased to note the success of the standards-based movement; with the help of our Goals 2000 program, today 48 states have developed standards for student performance. I believe we should invest more in all our public schools, which is why I have proposed an additional $115 billion over 10 years to support education initiatives from preschool to college. But we cannot tolerate failing schools either. Every state and every school district should be required to identify failing schools and work to turn them around – with strict accountability for results and strong incentives for success. And if these failing schools don't improve quickly, they should be shut down and reopened with new leadership and a full peer evaluation of every teacher."

Reform

Pat Buchanan: No response.

Republicans

George W. Bush: "As president, I will fundamentally change the relationship between the states and federal government in education. I strongly believe in local control of schools and curriculum. We will grant unprecedented freedom and flexibility in return for high standards and results. In my administration, federal dollars will no longer follow failure. We will ask states and local school districts to set their own standards to achieve excellence in the core areas of math, English, science and history, and hold them accountable for results. I oppose a national test because it would undermine curriculum developed at the state and local level."

Alan Keyes: No response.

John McCain: "I do not favor nationally imposed standards or federal funding strings. State and local education agencies should be responsible for developing and enforcing high academic standards. I don't believe we should penalize students by taking away limited education dollars according to federal dictates. Such strings would invariably require states to spend even more money on federally imposed bureaucratic requirements – money that would be better spent in the classroom. That's why I propose sending elementary and secondary education funding directly to classrooms rather than having it siphoned off by federal and state bureaucracies. If this funding flows to classrooms that continue to fail, the state should have the authority to allow students to use that funding directly for educational programs that best meet their academic needs. Empowering parents and students through educational choice and competition is the surest path to academic excellence."

Gore proposes more Medicaid coverage

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) – Eyeing bigger potential budget surpluses, Vice President Al Gore Wednesday plumped up his campaign proposal for Medicare coverage of prescription drugs. He dubbed the proposal "Medi-coverage" and declared it the "third great pillar" in American health care – after Medicare and Medicaid.

Gore traveled to a retirement community to make his call for a bigger drug benefit protecting the catastrophically or chronically ill elderly. He hoped to dominate this year's political debate with the proposal.

"I predict to you that the Democratic nominee for president and the Democratic nominees for House and Senate all across this country will be running on the issue of Medi-coverage," Gore told more than 1,000 older Americans in an auditorium at Century Village.

Gore's opponent for the Democratic presidential nomination, Bill Bradley, told an audience at Columbia University in New York Wednesday that the economic boom had bypassed many, including 13.5 million children living in poverty and 44 million citizens without health insurance.

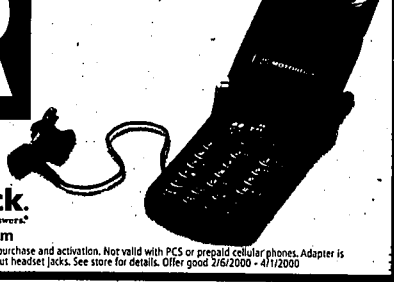

"We will not have true prosperity until all our citizens share in our economic growth," Bradley said.

Bradley also released a new radio ad for Washington state that, for the first time, moves his harshest criticism of Gore into his paid advertising.

It says Gore was a "conservative congressman" with an anti-abortion and pro-gun record and points listeners to a new, anti-Gore Web site. In the ad, an announcer asks: "When it comes right down to it, what does Al Gore really stand for?"

Scientists: Conservation comes down to 'hot spots'

The Associated Press

Scientists who inventoried Earth's shrinking wilds have reached an astonishing conclusion: More than a third of the planet's plant and animal species exist exclusively on a scant 1.4 percent of its land surface.

The researchers said the findings show that saving a large share of the world's species from extinction isn't an overwhelming task. They believe conservationists just need to focus on safeguarding 25 species-rich "hotspots" – mostly tropical rain forests.

"The whole point of this is that for a few hundred million dollars a year, focused on these hotspots, we can go a long way toward guaranteeing maintenance of the full range of diversity of life on Earth," said Russell Mittermeier, president of Conservation International, and one of the study's authors.

The British-American team led by Norman Myers of Oxford University relied on previous research to tally the numbers of land species that inhabit Earth's remaining pristine forests, grasslands and other habitats. Fish and insects were excluded.

Car jacker faces murder charge in boy's death

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) – Motorists watched in horror as a stolen vehicle sped down a highway, dragging to death a little boy who was entangled in a seat belt outside one of the doors.

Kim L. Davis

Six-year-old Jake D. Robel of Blue Springs died Tuesday before the driver of the Chevrolet Blazer could be stopped by pursuing motorists. Witnesses said the chase reached speeds of 80 mph. "He came flying around us and we saw the kid hanging out the side of the car bouncing," said Fred Byam, who chased the Blazer. "I was honking my horn and flashing my lights."

Kim L. Davis, 34, of Kansas City, Mo., was charged Wednesday with second-degree murder, robbery, child abuse and kidnapping.

Police said Davis took the vehicle when Jake's mother left it running while she went inside a sandwich shop. The man tried to shove the boy out of the car, and "probably thought he'd gotten the kid out, because then he took off," Sgt. Gregg Wilkinson said.

Though districts might change, census won't affect Idaho much

Arrival of the year 2000 didn't produce many Y2K bugs, but the new year is beginning to hatch something that could bug Idaho's rural residents for years: The U.S. Census.

Every 10 years, the census takes inventory of America's inhabitants. It asks a lot of innocuous questions about how many bathrooms are in your home, how you get to work (private car, bicycle, walking or other), and how you enter your home (front door, back door, dog door or other).

As population shifts, so does political representation. Change is inevitable after the 2000 Census, but don't expect a Democratic renaissance in Idaho.

Census data is used for many things. Political reapportionment is one of them. Though it might not sound like much, reapportionment can be the equivalent of an earthquake when shifting the balance of power.

It's the reason why populous states such as California and New York have so many congressional representatives. It's also the reason why sparsely settled Montana and Wyoming have only one each.

In the Idaho Legislature, it's the reason why Ada and Canyon counties have 30 legislators between them, while Blaine, Camas, Gooding and Lincoln counties must share only three.

That's how representative democracy works. Each representative represents a certain number of people. When enough of those people pick up and move, to Caldwell or to California, their representative's position goes with them.

In Idaho, this doesn't augur well for rural areas that are losing population. When the next reapportionment is over, the Treasure Valley and major cities in the Panhandle are likely to gain representation at the expense of southern and eastern Idaho.

It wouldn't be a disaster, but it's something to keep an eye on. The most important thing when carving new legislative districts is to preserve Idaho's egalitarian tradition. That means resisting the urge to contrive Hispanic or Democratic districts through gerrymandering.

Frankly, we don't expect things to change much when the political districts are redrawn in the next couple of years. Idaho has the most Republican legislature in the union, so a Democratic renaissance is unlikely.

As for legislative representation flowing toward the bigger cities, it's worth noting that the bulk of Idaho's population already lives in a relative handful of cities – yet the Legislature is full of farmers and ranchers. We are still a long way from the day in which Idaho's rural interests are ignored in the Statehouse.

Political reapportionment can be a factor when calculating shifts in the balance of power, but there are plenty of other factors at work. In Idaho, don't expect reapportionment to change things much.

With OPEC back, prices are moving up

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

The most interesting thing about the run-up in oil prices – from roughly $10 to $30 a barrel during the past year – is that almost no one predicted it. Just about everyone who knew anything about global oil considered OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) a toothless cartel. This has turned out to be wrong, at least for the time being, and the consequences could range from the annoying (a slight rise of inflation) to the dangerous (a recession or a crisis over Iraq).

By all odds, we don't face a repeat of the "energy crises" of the 1970s. Compared with the early 1970s, the economy now requires only about half as much oil per dollar of output (Gross Domestic Product), says economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates. Growth has emphasized "services." At $1.40 a gallon, gasoline prices are – after adjusting for inflation – less than half their 1980 level. Cars' fuel efficiency has risen by more than 50 percent since 1973, from 13 miles per gallon then to 21 mpg now.

If oil remains at $30 a barrel, inflation may rise one percentage point, says Zandi. The economy might slow slightly, by about 0.5 percent of GDP. This would hardly be a calamity. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan already fears the economy is growing too rapidly.

There are other contrasts with the 1970s. Then, panic reigned. People thought the world was running dry. Prices would rise forever. With hindsight, these alarmist forecasts seem farfetched. The day that the world exhausts its oil seems distant. Between 1973 and 1998, world oil consumption rose about 25 percent to 26 billion barrels annually. However, proven oil reserves jumped more than 50 percent to 1 trillion barrels.

One reason is improved technology, says Mark Rubin of the American Petroleum Institute. There are fewer "dry holes" because three-dimensional computerized seismic maps of underground formations improve discovery prospects. Similarly, horizontal drilling means more oil can be recovered from known fields. (A vertically drilled hole taps an oil reservoir at only one spot, from top to bottom; by contrast, a horizontal drill – the pipe turns once it hits oil – can run along a reservoir for thousands of feet and drain it more thoroughly.) Deepwater drilling has opened new fields. Fifteen years ago, oil companies couldn't practically go beyond 1,300 feet of water. Now that's 7,000 feet or more.

None of this has stabilized oil prices. The law of supply and demand endures. The simplest explanation of the recent rise is the preceding collapse. In 1998, oil prices dropped about 50 percent. Everything conspired to depress them. Asia's economic crisis slowed demand. OPEC miscalculated and increased production. Too much supply chased too little demand.

For producers, the results were devastating. In the United States, exploration and drilling dropped. The American oil industry lost about 65,000 jobs. Abroad, oil-producing nations suffered huge revenue losses. The effect was traumatizing, says Robert Priddle, director of the International Energy Agency (IEA) in Paris. OPEC's internal quarreling subsided and the cartel concentrated on curbing production.

In March 1999, it agreed to cut output. Cheating had doomed earlier agreements. By contrast, compliance with March's agreement has ranged between 75 percent and 85 percent, estimates the IEA. One reason was the election of Hugo Chavez as president of Venezuela in late 1998; he reversed the policy of flouting OPEC quotas. Significantly, four non-OPEC nations (Mexico, Russia, Norway and Oman) also agreed in March to cut their combined output. This, too, strengthened OPEC.

What now? Possibly nothing. Some big producers – again, a contrast with the 1970s – recognize that it's suicidal simply to gouge consuming countries. There's too much economic interdependence. In a global recession, some producers (like Mexico) would suffer through the loss of other exports. OPEC next meets March 27. The Saudi and Mexican oil ministers have hinted that quotas might be relaxed to reduce prices to about $25 a barrel.

But surprises happen. Alone, higher oil prices might not cause a recession. However, interest rates are also rising. The stock market is drifting lower. All these developments could weaken consumer spending – the pillar of America's economic boom. There are other hazards. Oil economist Philip Verleger thinks that prices could drift up from $30 a barrel. The result, he says, is that Saddam Hussein could demand the end of economic sanctions against Iraq "because the world will need Iraq's oil to maintain price stability." Interestingly, a confrontation might occur just before the U.S. presidential election.

This highlights the true oil problem: Two-thirds of known oil reserves lie in the Middle East. While this is so, catastrophic disruptions remain a chronic threat. We ought to fortify ourselves against the worst by expanding our strategic petroleum reserve (we haven't) and prudently discouraging oil use through taxes (we haven't). Oil power endures. We ignore it at our peril.

Swipe at Wendell was unfair

I was shocked that you had the audacity to take a swipe at Wendell for its recent problems.

My wife and I are young, married and have chosen not to have children thus far. Not only are we hit by the "marriage penalty," but we also don't benefit from the tax breaks many get for having children. On top of that, we are paying for the infrastructure and services required by people that do have kids, namely schools. Why should we have to pay to subsidize other people's desire to have children? Why should our money put your children through school? That doesn't benefit us, right?

Wrong! That is extremely simple-minded thinking. Part of the price of living in a civilized society is that you help pay for structures and services that stabilize that society, make it safe and ensure that everyone has a chance to succeed. The motive for this isn't even altruistic. An educated, fair society is a healthy and safe society, the benefits of which will be enjoyed by everyone. It's a pity the zero-sum economics and the greed of Republicans in Idaho blinds them to this fact.

I graduated from Wendell High School when it was located in the building being evacuated. Despite meager funding by the government, I received a quality education. I was fortunate to have been instructed by many dedicated teachers and community members that helped me get where I am today. Knowing this, I would personally give my own money and time to help see that those kids get the same opportunity I had. What does that say for the Legislature in Boise?

Wendell has the bond capacity, but does it really have the money? Wendell is a small community and it's debatable whether they have the means to pull off another bond. Even if they did, the same kind of thinking you encourage in your editorial would probably stop them. Shame on you and shame on anyone who doesn't understand that what makes society work is all of us contributing to the good of the whole, whether or not the money benefits us directly.

Paper does a fine job online

Hi, I'm Cristina Bravim. I lived in Twin Falls as an exchange student, and my host dad read The Times-News every day, so I started to read it with him. Now, there is already one year that I came back to Brazil, and I still read The Times-News, but this time the online version.

I just want you guys to know that The Times-News is a great newspaper. Thanks for everything.

Don't buy the hype, Cassia

I have been following the story of Cassia County over the Internet and it is an all-to-familiar story.

Murphy Farms Inc. used the same words when they tried to come into Hodgeman County, Kan. They promised economic development, but they said nothing about what it would cost the taxpayers to provide the services they would require. This would include more road maintenance and equipment, bigger schools, hospital services and the list goes on.

Much ado about nudity

Maybe it is just the fact that I have lived in Europe for the last three years where seeing the naked human form is commonplace, but this is ridiculous. Maybe our (my) moral fiber has been misplaced, but I can't believe the amount of flak that has been tossed around for that young man who chose to streak in the gym at Twin Falls High School.

I remember the Bruin Week assembly when I attended it in 1984. I remember it fondly because of the fact that I got to wear a toga with several of my classmates. It was great to discuss the fact that we might not wear shorts underneath (how scandalous). If one of us would have had the "gumption" to drop our toga, I am sure that we would all still be laughing about it in a couple of years in our 20-year class reunion.

I would call the act childish, but I happened to be alive in the '70's when adults did the same thing. The "sport" was even glamorized by a song that was very popular on KLIX at the time. Although the act might have been a bit sophomoric, it was all a harmless prank. If a high school student hasn't seen a naked man, there is something wrong. It was my understanding that most of those in attendance at the assembly laughed, applauded and even cheered upon spotting the streaker. Does this sound like an intentional criminal act to you?

To even suggest that streaking is a "sex crime" is ridiculous, and to correlate streaking to those types of acts is unconscionable. Isn't it typical for a teen-ager to try to be noticed to any extreme, to make rash judgments, to be cool at all costs? Let the guy graduate with his class. Lighten up! Try jumping into the next mosh pit you see – that will help you see the light. By the way, Ray Stevens and Ethel would be proud of you son.

OPINION

JOHN M. WALLACE AND JOHN R. CHRISTY

Are human-induced changes to the environment causing global warming? Policy-makers and the general public want to know now whether increased amounts of "greenhouse gases" such as carbon dioxide are permanently altering our climate. Their sense of urgency is understandable, given what is at stake. A warming of even a few degrees could have serious implications for weather patterns and water resources. But in the rush for fast answers, it's tempting to overlook what the science reveals.

That is what happened recently when a National Research Council panel on which we participated released a report on measuring the Earth's surface and atmospheric temperature changes – one aspect of the global warming debate. When the report hit the streets, several news outlets across the country cited it as one more piece of definitive evidence that greenhouse gases were causing the Earth to warm. Policy-makers rushed to announce initiatives to combat the problem. To add to the confusion, some interest groups with entrenched positions tried to discredit findings that did not support their views. Others misused our report to tell only part of the story.

But by trying to turn global warming into a "pro" or "con" issue, a scientific matter suddenly becomes politicized. Instead of learning from the latest scientific findings and getting closer to the truth about global warming, we become mired in an artificial debate that nobody can win. To really understand long-term global climate change, we have to pay attention to what the science tells us. And like it or not, the evidence to date is telling us that while we're making great strides, we still don't have all the answers.

Our panel was asked to settle some of the puzzling inconsistencies that have helped spur the controversy over global warming in the first place. Many in the scientific community were troubled by an apparent incongruity between two different sets of temperature data. Surface-temperature measurements indicate that the Earth has warmed. But data collected by satellites and balloon-borne instruments since 1979 indicate little, if any, warming of the upper atmosphere.

After reviewing the data, we found that despite these differences in temperature data, the Earth has indeed warmed by about 1 degree F. in the past century. In fact, surface temperatures in the past two decades have risen at a rate substantially greater than average for the past 100 years. These are important findings, to be sure. But we also need to be aware that although the Earth's surface temperature has increased substantially in the past 20 years, that increase might not necessarily be representative of any long-term climate change caused by greenhouse gas emissions.

The differences between the surface and upper-air data are probably due to a combination of factors. For example, depletion of ozone in the stratosphere may have cooled the atmosphere without affecting the surface temperature. And the debris that entered the atmosphere when Mount Pinatubo erupted in 1991 also produced cooling, which was probably more pronounced in the satellite measurements than in those recorded at the Earth's surface. When these factors are taken into account in atmospheric models, the simulated trends agree more closely with the temperature observations, although some discrepancies remain.

So we know that despite differences in the two sets of temperature data, the Earth's surface is in fact warming. Our panel did not address whether greenhouse gases have led to the temperature increases of the past two decades.

Unfortunately, the important distinction between greenhouse warming and global warming was all but ignored by some policy-makers and interest groups who seized on our findings to further their own agendas. Many scientists do believe that increasing greenhouse gases or other human-induced changes are responsible for the warming, but some still have reasonable doubts. As scientists, it's our responsibility – and it's a hallmark of sound science – to point out the many uncertainties that need to be explored.

If we really want to understand global warming, then it's time to forget about choosing sides and let science do its job. It's the only way to ensure that our decisions are based on the best available information.

John M. Wallace, professor of atmospheric sciences at the University of Washington, chaired a National Research Council panel that produced the report, "Reconciling Observations of Global Temperature Change." John R. Christy, professor of atmospheric science at the University of Alabama, was a member of the panel.

Program really helps

I was dismayed to hear that the Idaho Joint Finance and Appropriations Committee Medicaid Subcommittee is considering the elimination of funding for developmental therapy services for children with disabilities. Idaho has very few resources for these children and their families.

However, that situation has improved in the past couple years. A number of developmental service agencies are now offering services in Idaho; several are in Twin Falls. These agencies provide hope where before there was none. Unfortunately, developmental therapy is expensive and without assistance, most people could not afford it.

My experience as a developmental therapist has allowed me to witness the drastic improvement in many of the children receiving therapy. I can say without hesitation that these programs work. Not only do they teach life skills to the children but they also provide support and often training for the parents.

My interest in disabled children is more than just professional. My 11-year-old stepson was diagnosed with high functional autism, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder and obsessive compulsive disorder when he was 4 years old. At that time, special education and speech therapy were about the only services available. A couple of years ago, when services became available, he started developmental therapy. His father and I quickly noticed a marked improvement in his attitude and behavior. About a year later, he began another therapy program, this one based on behavior modification. The combination of the two therapy programs has made a big improvement in his life. A child that was once almost totally dependent on others and lacking the most basic social skills is now well on the road to some degree of independence.

Because of developmental therapy, countless children with various disabilities have been given the chance to lead meaningful lives. To do away with these programs would mean a bleak future for Idaho's disabled children.

If you would like to help, please contact Rep. Randy Hansen or write your representatives: Idaho State Legislature, State Capitol Building, P.O. Box 83720-0081 (House) or 83720-0081 (Senate), or call (800) 626-0471.

More angles on bond issue

In regard to The Times-News' comprehensive coverage of the upcoming Jerome Middle School bond issue, I present some issues not as readily apparent as the property tax factor.

When Jerome passed the last bond issue for new classrooms, we were not aware that $142,000 for a new middle school site was a possibility. Why wasn't this money used for desperately needed rooms? It is my understanding that school owns the old bird farm one mile south of the high school. I should think this would be close enough to warrant close consideration as a middle school site. In addition, they own the intended original site of the middle school on North Lincoln, and the Washington School property on South Lincoln. It appears the school district is land poor.

I'm sorry, but the largest tax contributor is still the agriculture industry. Everything we have to sell – beets, potatoes, hay, grain, cattle and dairy products are in the doldrums. The Environmental Protection Agency regulations are setting the stage to put smaller operators out of business. Our water is under attack for endangered species. If we lose our water to take care of fish, I can guarantee there will be no need for a school bond election of any kind. Farm folks, by nature, are a conservative group used to working with risk. At the beginning of each year, we optimistically venture forth with a handful of dollars from the bank and hope that this year will be better than the last. Now with the bank demanding their dollars back with no source of repayment in sight comes the call for a new middle school. Mr. Cobble is saying, "We'll keep trying until it passes." Pardon me, but it sounds more like "hit him again until he says 'uncle.'"

One way to ease pressure on the gymnasium would be to restrict use to those who are student body members. The real pressure comes from adult teams living out their fantasies of becoming stars.

Let's have a breather on the bond issues. I suggest the School Board divest itself of the surplus land, get its ducks all lined up and come up with a reasonable plan before posing another bond election. The cement isn't even dry on the last bond issue yet.

Sacred cows and dollars

Sometimes when you see a society from a distance, you can see it more clearly. When you look at India, it is easy to see the starving people next to the sacred cows they refuse to eat, and wonder if they couldn't use a little barbecue sauce.

We are all oblivious to our blind spots, but hopefully through the public democratic process, here in America, we have a chance to correct situations.

It seemed odd that the head of Idaho's Water Resources Department so calmly stated, as a side response at a meeting, that our water would someday be unusable from the nitrates contaminating it. Sometimes our blind spots seem intentionally blurred by the pursuit of business, but this should not be such a casual statement. You can take all your money, but you need clean water to live, and for the next generation to survive.

Our county commissioners have refused Bill Chisholm's request for a moratorium on more permits. The county commissioners do not know how much manure our water can tolerate and apparently do not want to know.

Dave Roper, the head of the Idaho Pork Producers, has a lot of legitimate complaints about the lame new regulations for pigs and poultry (Times-News, Feb. 21). He is correct that the dairies and the sheep are politically excluded from the new regulations. He is right that the rules are unfair to the middle and small producers.

Interesting that the only supporter of the new rules is Ron Achs, the Wood River money man behind the Big Sky Farms proposal for 250,000 pigs. Achs gave Gov. Kempthorne a mere $4,000, but he got green-light regulations from Dirk in return. Dirk is for sale and so is your future.

So the big picture is that we have an over-production of pork. Ranchers go broke on low prices, even though the grocer and the commodity brokers get rich. So will Achs' 250,000 hogs help?

A moratorium will help stop these industrial factories from crushing the family farmers, as well as protect our water.

Our politicians all praise the family farmer, but they are accepting money from businessmen who are going to make you extinct, while they make our air just plain stink.

So who is worshipping sacred cows and who is worshipping money?

What to tell the Dentist
It's important for parents to take an active role in their child's oral health care. Parents should let the dentist know about their child's health. Things parents should tell the dentist: If the child is ill; what medications the child may be taking; if the child has any known drug allergies.

What to ask the Dentist
If you don't understand the dentist's recommendations for your child's oral health treatment, don't be afraid to ask for more information. Ask if there are other treatment options available for your child. How do the options differ in cost? Which option will best solve the problem?

What to tell your Child
Children should know that the dentist is a friendly doctor who will help them take care of their teeth. Be positive and try to make dental visits an enjoyable experience for your child. Set a good example by brushing your own teeth twice a day, using floss or an interdental cleaner between your teeth once a day and visiting your dentist regularly. Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in helping your child maintain good oral health throughout life.

Preston King, professor of political science at Lancaster University, England, with his daughter Oona King, a British labor Party member of Parliament, get ready to depart London's Gatwick airport Wednesday prior to their departure for Atlanta, Ga., to attend his brother's funeral.

President pardons convicted draft dodger

ATLANTA (AP) – A black man who refused induction into the Army in the 1960s because the all-white draft board wouldn't address him as "Mr." was returning to the United States for the first time in 39 years Wednesday after receiving a presidential pardon.

Preston King, 63, fled his hometown of Albany, Ga., in 1961 after being sentenced to 18 months in prison. Over the years, he made a life for himself as a professor in England, where his daughter is a member of Parliament.

On Monday, President Clinton granted King a pardon so he could return to Albany for the funeral today of his oldest brother, Clennon W. King Jr.

King's family – including his daughter Oona, a member of Britain's House of Commons – planned a reunion at the Atlanta airport Wednesday afternoon, when King was scheduled to arrive from London.

"I can't express to you how elated the family is," nephew Chevene King said before his family left Albany to drive to Atlanta.

"I'm sure to a large degree it won't actually sink in until we see him home."

In an interview with CNN before he left London, King said he was "going with great expectations."

"I'm a little bit numb, but I'm going back," said King, a political science professor at Lancaster University.

He said that he expected to find the United States "radically transformed" from when he was last here, and that the memory of leaving his home is still painful.

"There are very elemental things that make you a human being," he said. "All that was stripped away."

In 1958, King, who had been granted time by his draft board to pursue a master's degree at the London School of Economics and Political Science, was told to report for induction.

King noted that the draft board addressed him as "Mr. Preston King" before learning he was black and "Preston" after that. He refused to report for an Army physical until the board addressed him as "Mr.," as they did white draftees. He was eventually convicted of draft evasion.

During his three-day trip to the United States, King planned to call the president and to thank retired U.S. District Judge William A. Bootle, who presided over his trial in 1961 and petitioned Clinton to pardon him.

The judge, now 97, said King had suffered enough, having missed the funerals of both his parents and three brothers. He said that the sentence was appropriate but that King had established himself as a good citizen.

Truckers fight for tax break

WASHINGTON (AP) – Lawmakers expressed concern at rising fuel prices that have left independent truck drivers struggling to make ends meet and prompted a big-rig convoy to Capitol Hill.

"Truckers need immediate financial relief to help offset the escalating burden of diesel fuel," Sen. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., said Tuesday. "These higher costs will soon be felt by consumers if we don't take immediate action."

Torricelli said he would introduce legislation proposing a six-month suspension of the 24-cent-a-gallon federal tax truckers pay on diesel fuel.

More than 200 truckers, organized by the National Owner Operator Trucking Association, converged on the U.S. Capitol on Tuesday in a convoy that began in New Jersey and traveled through Delaware and Maryland.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle said he was "very sympathetic" to the truckers' plight.

Golden Eagles hit Las Vegas

By Jeff Rosen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Losing four out of four games on last week's season-opening road swing to California didn't bother College of Southern Idaho coach Jim Walker a whole lot.

Neither did the fact that his Golden Eagles returned to Twin Falls lugging a dismal .175 team batting average and an all-too-familiar 6.35 team ERA.

What really vexed the 26-year coach was how his players withered at the plate during the quartet of non-conference contests. Four games in, Region 18-champion Southern Idaho is bringing up the rear in the Scenic West Athletic Conference standings.

"It was like Silence of the Lambs," he said. "It wouldn't have mattered to me that we lost four games if I felt like we competed. But we just weren't tough outs. And that was disappointing."

Swinging wood bats to the opposition's aluminum, Southern Idaho (0-4) fell victim to its own psyche as much as anything. After hanging with American River in their opener only to lose by the slimmest possible margin at 6-5, CSI produced just three more runs through its next three games.

Filer wins SCIC tournament, heads to state competition

By Vin Cappiello
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – It seemed only fitting that after three quarters, No. 1 Filer and No. 2 Kimberly each had three teams fouls and 30 points.

An even match. A one-quarter showdown.

Eight minutes later – make that 11 years later – the Wildcats found themselves in unfamiliar territory, having qualified for the Class A-2 state tournament by way of a 42-38 victory over the Bulldogs in the championship game of the Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference tourney Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho gymnasium.

Filer will play either Shelley or Salmon next Thursday, while Kimberly makes its final attempt to qualify for state against the District V runner-up Saturday at Declo at 1 p.m.

After three physical quarters Wednesday night, it appeared as if the Wildcats might have to wait a bit longer to start making hotel reservations in Boise. The Bulldogs won the third quarter 9-2 after trailing 28-21 at the half, the result of a stingy Filer defense that limited Kimberly to 8-of-25 shooting and strong inside play from seniors Ben Allen, Brad Walker and Josh Prigmore.

The Wildcats threw a curveball at the Bulldogs, sporting a four-man zone while senior Zach Chadwick chased senior Billy Humphries, Kimberly's leading scorer, all over the court.

"He's kind of the catalyst on their team," an exhausted Chadwick said afterward. "He's a dang good player. I respect him very much."

Chadwick held Humphries to a single field goal and pair of free throws and managed to score seven points of his own. Humphries' produced a 25-point output in the Bulldogs' 48-36 win Feb. 11.

"That was our plan . . . he hurt us so bad last time we played," said third-year Filer coach Bruce Lenington.

No player scored in the 20s on this night. In fact, Kimberly junior Cody Askew led all scorers with 11 points, and Prigmore paced the Wildcats with nine. It was an inside battle – Allen, Prigmore and Chase McLaughlin vs. Bulldogs Askew, Matt Lee, and Matt Kopydlowski. As it turned out, each trio ended up with 22 points apiece.

But down the stretch, Lenington said senior leadership and his team's offseason work ethic paid off.

Murtaugh, Camas advance

By Matt Peterson

BURLEY – State championship dreams survived for Murtaugh and Camas County while Dietrich and Castleford saw their seasons come to an end Wednesday in first-round action of the Class A-4 District IV Boys' High School Basketball Tournament in Burley.

The Red Devils, who defeated Dietrich in Game 1, advanced to play Camas County, who downed Castleford in Game 2, today at 6:30 p.m. in Burley. The winner will receive the district's third seed in the state tournament.

Southside champion Oakley will then face Northside's No. 1 Richfield at 8 p.m. to decide the District's No. 1 and 2 state seeds.

Murtaugh 58, Dietrich 44

Senior Tucker Johnson scored 17 of his game-high 19 points in the second half as Murtaugh came from behind to down Dietrich 58-44 in Game 1 Wednesday.

"We had a rough start (to the season)," said Murtaugh head coach Clair Anderson, whose team finished runner-up behind Mackay at last year's state tourney. "The kids deserve this. They've worked their guts out."

Trailing 10-8 after one and 21-20 at halftime, the Red Devils took their first lead of the game, 28-27, on a Johnson three-pointer with just over five minutes to play in the third quarter. Dietrich reclaimed the lead on a Bruce Dilworth jumper, then tacked on three more points on Ben Hoskisson's third three-pointer of the quarter.

But Murtaugh answered with a 7-1 run over the next two minutes to take the lead for good, 35-33, on a pair of Kenny Roseborough free throws.

Midway through the run, Murtaugh starter Kyle Roseborough fouled out of the game after picking up two fouls on one play – the latter a technical that ended his night. To that point in the game, Roseborough had scored 10 points and been the Red Devils' primary inside man. Instead of falling apart, however, Murtaugh regrouped.

State wrestling rocks Holt today

This week's rankings – B3

POCATELLO – After working their way to the top in districts last week, wrestlers from 14 area schools will be at Holt Arena in Pocatello today through Saturday to compete in the Class A-1, A-2 and A-3 state wrestling tournaments.

Wrestlers who placed among the top three finishers in their respective weight classes at the district level received automatic trips to the state matches.

At the Class A-1 level, the Minico Spartans' season has been a successful one with the help of 12 wrestlers who will be striving for a state title in their respective weight classes.

At the Class A-2 level, Gooding should be the local team to watch after finishing with a 17-0 season record in dual meets. The Senators are sending nine wrestlers to battle for the trophy.

Finally, of the five schools competing for the Class A-3 title, Declo has the most wrestlers aiding in the fight for a title, but the tournament will be a first-time experience for the Valley Vikings, who were able to develop a wrestling program for the first time this season.

Win or lose in individual matches, area coaches and competitors will be pulling for each other once finals roll around.

"It's nice to see our district do well," said Filer coach Gordy Schroeder. "We battle each other all year long, but there's not a coach in this district who doesn't root for another team's kids when it comes to state."

The tournament will be held at Idaho State University today from 2 p.m. to 10 p.m., Friday from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., and Saturday from 9 a.m. until the finals are finished.

Finals introductions will begin at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday followed by championship matches at 3 p.m.

State bowling rosters – B3

She turned back toward her chair, a hand settling on her swollen stomach as teammates greeted her with claps and shouts of praise.

For Larson, who's nine months pregnant and due to deliver any day now, the only shouts she wants to hear are "It's a boy!" or "It's a girl!" She's chosen not to find out what she's carrying, though she does know that she's keeping her newborn.

And that she enjoys bowling enough to compete. No matter what.

"I just love the team and the sport," Larson said. "I just hope that when people see that something's happened to you, you can keep on going."

For Trojan head coach Sally Toone, Larson, who will bowl in the No. 1 position for Wendell at Friday's state tournament at Rupert Bowl, has been an example of someone who has found a way to persevere.

"I keep asking her: 'You're sure you're feeling all right so you can bowl on Friday?' She's just really been incredible through the season," Toone said.

Unfortunately, the Wendell team wasn't as incredible on the Bowladrome lanes, finishing seventh in the varsity district tournament.

Weekend outlook: "Where these wrestlers sit, they have to have the best tournament of their lives to place. Everything is so competitive, it's hard to say how they will do." – Slotten.

Schroeder went to Kimberly High School in the 1980s, wrestled in the Army, and coached most recently as a Wendell assistant.

Coach Schroeder says: Conditioning has paid off. "They run their butts off, and we're getting pretty aggressive on the mat. We've beaten a lot of kids in the third round this year."

Weekend outlook: "I'm thinking we're taking six kids with a legitimate chance of placing in the top six. I'd like to see a top 10 team finish if possible." – Schroeder.

McSorley receives record suspension

NEW YORK (AP) – Marty McSorley was suspended Wednesday for the rest of the season and the playoffs for hitting Donald Brashear in the head with his stick – the harshest punishment in NHL history for an on-ice attack.

McSorley was suspended for 23 games – the number of games left in Boston's season – and the playoffs, NHL vice president Colin Campbell said. The Boston enforcer was suspended indefinitely Tuesday, one day after he swung his stick with both hands against the side of Brashear's head in the Bruins' 5-2 defeat to the Canucks. Brashear was knocked out and bloodied.

"We really try to stress the weight room," Lenington said. "And our post players have gotten really strong over the last year.

"It's been 11 years, and I knew when I took over the program, this was going to be the group of kids that would get us to the state tournament. These kids really deserve to go."

The game came down to the final five minutes. With the scored knotted at 34, Allen went to the bench with his fourth foul at the 4:58 mark. Kopydlowski hit a driving layup for a 36-34 edge with 4:40 remaining.

"Kop went in and attacked from the top," Kimberly coach Roger Keller said. "He got us few big buckets."

But another Filer senior stepped up. This time it was non-starter Brandon Kobayashi, who hit a driving layup and free throw for a 37-36 Wildcat lead with 4:26 on the clock.

The teams traded turnovers, blocks and missed shots over the next three minutes until Askew put the Bulldogs back on top 38-37 with a short-range banker with 1:30 on the clock.

With 55 seconds remaining, Prigmore responded off a jump pass from Allen and kissed the eventual game-winner off the glass.

Kimberly, however, wasn't finished as Allen twice went to the line and missed the front end of a one-and-one; the first miss was rebounded by McLaughlin, the second resulted in a held ball and possession was awarded to Filer.

Chadwick added a pair of charities with 18 seconds left to push the lead to 41-38, and the Bulldogs called timeout – their fourth of the quarter – to set up a potential game-tying shot.

Humphries managed to work free and let fly a three-pointer that was off the mark and rebounded by Walker. He hit one of two charities with two seconds to play to clinch the victory.

Bowling

Bruin bowlers, meanwhile, luck finally was on their side of the lane. Needing a spare in the 10th frame against the defending state champion Minico Spartans, Mindy Burney delivered a three-pin knockout to capture the league championship, 174-166.

After taking down two of the pins, her ball caromed off the back of the pit (the area behind the pins) and caught the eight-pin for the game-winning spare.

"I just went, 'Oh my God!'" Burney said.

The match itself was back and forth. Trailing by eight pins after three frames, the Spartans hit two spares and a nine to take a 73-69 lead through the fifth. Then, 2000 singles and defending state champion Tiffinay Bywater, who was bowling on a very sore left toe, hit a three-pin spare in the sixth to keep the lead.

But Bruin bowlers Kelly Kramer, Belinda Frakes and Andrea Stansell nailed three straight strikes for Twin Falls that Minico could only answer with strike-spare-open frame.

That brought it to the 10th, which Burney opened with a seven. Bywater stepped up and promptly rattled off two consecutive strikes, but an unfazed Burney made her spare and finished with a nine for the win.

"I just knew I had to get it," she said.

Minico still had the last laugh, as the Spartans took the district title with 1,243 pins to the Bruins' 1,073.

In all, 24 varsity, JV and JV-B teams participated in the tournament, with the Bruins picking up plaques at both the JV and JV-B levels.

Wednesday's District Results:

"It was tough," said catcher Mark Weisenmiller. "We just didn't play well at all. Guys started to get down on themselves."

A shot at redemption comes today as play begins at the three-day Coyote Classic, hosted by the Community College of Southern Nevada in Las Vegas. Returning to Weisenmiller and freshman infielder Eric Kitchen's hometown, the Eagles will again swing wood – but this time with some extra hitting tutelage from Walker under their belts.

Simply bringing the bat around sooner has been the thrust of Walker's advice.

"We're trying to get them to get the bat going before the stride," he said. "We have to learn to get the bat started sooner."

Last weekend also showed that the team's pitching needs fine-tuning, but not a major overhaul.

"The pitching will be better than we thought," Walker said. "They showed signs of what we worked on all fall and winter. We've just got to work on it from the stretch. They're so concerned with holding base runners, they lose it at the plate. They want to rush, and they get that long arm out of the stretch."

Net result? Too many pitches.

"In the fourth inning, nobody was under 80," Walker said.

Defensively, the squad will miss the athletic play of freshman outfielder T.J. Floyd, who suffered a severely dislocated shoulder last weekend. Diving back to first base on a pick-off attempt, he took a hard tag after a walk and is expected to miss at least half the season.

Also banged up is sophomore outfielder Nick Bullen. The Boise native has nursed a troublesome knee since high school, Walker said, that has worsened recently. "It's sore," Walker said. "The tendons are loose. But we can't lose him."

Fortunately, the injuries have hit at one of the team's deepest positions. All six outfielders on the team were talked about three weeks ago as potential starters. Behind Bullen, Twin Falls sophomore Chris Westburg and sophomore Adrian Thomas, who saw the bulk of last week's at bats, are freshman Chris Frazier and Shaun Rudi.

At the plate, however, the latter two have combined for no hits, one base on balls and seven strikeouts through a sum 10 appearances.

"They need to step it up, no question," Walker said.

Also playing at the Coyote Classic this weekend are Utah Valley, Eastern Utah, Salt Lake, North Idaho and Scenic West Athletic Conference-leading Dixie, providing the Eagles their first spring look at the SWAC landscape.

"Last weekend was frustrating," Walker said. "I know we're better than that. Now it's time to show it."

Along with expecting the team's nine sophomores to show leadership this week, he's urging them to simply get on base. Andy Gretz holds the top sophomore batting average on the team after four games at .333 in three at bats. Next highest among second-year players, however, is Tyler Hasbrouck at .200.

"I hope they do a better job showing how to play, in showing how to be tough," Walker said. "They can't hit their way out of Dodge anymore."

Considering their early struggles with wood, do Walker and Co. miss metal?

A quick survey said no.

"I found that ping irritating," he said. "The kids agreed. But the wood isn't very forgiving."

Quick hits: Third baseman Kevin Sytko is batting a team-leading .400 through 10 appearances at the plate. Catcher Toby Barnett is not far behind at .286, third best after Gretz. "Toby stepped it up," Walker said. "And Sytko has really competed." Westburg is fourth at .222. ... The team has yet to triple or homer, though Barnett and Thomas have each doubled twice. Westburg, Bullen and infielder Jaime Kissner have done so once. ... Sytko has four walks to go along with his four base hits for a .571 on-base percentage, while sophomore pitcher Joey Clark lead the team with eight strikeouts. ... No one has stolen a base yet or even tried. "We couldn't do any strategy," Walker said. "We never had the opportunity to get into the small game." ... Through four appearances in eight games at the University of Florida, 1999 CSI graduate Craig Mosher was tied for second on the team with 10 strikeouts, but nursed a 10.00 ERA.

Warriors win twice in Christian tournament

The Times-News

PASCO, Wash. – The Twin Falls Christian Academy Warriors collected a pair of wins late Tuesday to move within two games of their third consecutive Northwest Christian Schools Boys' Basketball Tournament title.

The Warriors, who trounced Country Christian 70-25 and downed Temple Christian 40-33, were to meet host Riverview Christian in the semifinal round Wednesday. Results of that game and the final were unavailable by press time.

In beating Country Christian School soundly in Tuesday's first game, coach Brent Walker used only his junior varsity players. Chad Jones poured in 28 points, including four three-pointers, while Ray Miller added 22 points.

But the varsity guns were sorely needed in TFCA's next contest. The Warriors enjoyed a 15-point lead headed into the final period but couldn't score a single field goal in the fourth frame – their saving grace was solid free-throw shooting. Daniel Woodley led with 12, and Luke Walker and Tyler Jordan each tallied 11.

"It was a pretty good game," Walker said. "We put on a pressure defense in the second quarter that gave us a nice lead. Then the shooting went south. It was kind of a winning-ugly situation."

Bad weather postpones America's Cup

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) – The 30th America's Cup is turning into a snooze.

For the second time in six days, racing between Italy's Luna Rossa and Team New Zealand's Black Magic was called off because the weather was too nice on the unpredictable Hauraki Gulf.

There was more breeze on Thursday (Wednesday in the States) than on Saturday, when Race 1 was postponed, but officials felt it was too unstable to start the race.

Miami's Mourning comes back with a vengeance

MIAMI (AP) – Alonzo Mourning came back from a broken nose and hit his first 13 shots, scoring a season-high 43 points and leading the Miami Heat over the New Jersey Nets 99-85 Wednesday night.

Mourning, injured Monday when he was struck by Michael Curry's elbow in a loss at Detroit, finished 13-of-14 from the field and made 17-of-24 free throws. He added 16 rebounds in 33 minutes.

Mourning missed a 15-foot jumper with 56 seconds left in the game.

The All-Star center, who has had three facial injuries in the past three seasons, had his nose reset Tuesday. He protected it with a bandage instead of a mask.

"He was pretty much perfect. I know when I was watching, I was like, 'He hasn't missed yet,'" said the Nets' StephonMarbury, who had 21 points and seven assists.

The performance nearly put Mourning in rarefied territory: The only players ever to hit 15 or more field goals without missing are Wilt Chamberlain (18), Wilt Chamberlain (16), and Wilt Chamberlain (15), all in an almost mythical two-month span from January to March 1967.

Mourning, whose consecutive field goal streak over two games reached 19 before his miss, was nonchalant after achieving the third-highest point total of his NBA career in spite of the broken nose.

Lakers 116, Cavaliers 98

CLEVELAND – Kobe Bryant scored 21 points and Robert Horry added 20 as the Los Angeles Lakers completed a sweep of their six-game road trip with a victory over Cleveland. The victory was the Lakers' ninth straight overall and put them back in a tie for the best record in the NBA with Portland at 43-11.

NBA

Raptors 99, Knicks 88

NEW YORK – Vince Carter had 33 points, nine rebounds and nine assists to lead the Toronto Raptors over the New York Knicks, ruining Patrick Ewing's move into 15th place on the NBA's career scoring list. Carter scored 15 points in the third quarter and Toronto's final seven of the game to give the Raptors their second victory over the Knicks in nine days.

Pacers 118, Pistons 111

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. – Rik Smits returned to the Indiana lineup with a season-high 29 points and added nine rebounds as the Pacers beat the Detroit Pistons. Indiana got Smits back after he missed three games with a sore back, but lost Dale Davis in the first quarter. Davis was given two technical fouls by referee Mike Mathis after arguing a three-second violation.

76ers 94, Clippers 78

PHILADELPHIA – Allen Iverson scored 22 points as the Philadelphia 76ers handed the the Los Angeles Clippers their 12th straight loss and 18th in a row on the road. Toni Kukoc had 18 points, the most in his three games with the Sixers, and a career-high 14 rebounds. Tyrone Hill had a season-high 15 points, Theo Ratliff had 13 rebounds and Eric Snow 11 assists for Philadelphia.

Warriors 91, Bucks 86

MILWAUKEE – Donyell Marshall had a career-high 37 points and a season-high 21 rebounds as the Golden State Warriors, playing without their top three scorers, beat the reeling Milwaukee Bucks. Erick Dampier added 12 points and 10 rebounds for the Warriors, who improbably won for the third time in four games despite playing without injured Antawn Jamison, Chris Mills and Larry Hughes, who was a last-minute scratch because of a sprained ankle.

And that's exactly what Murtaugh did, eventually taking a 37-33 lead after three. Dietrich narrowed the lead to two, 39-37, with just over six minutes to play in the game, but an 8-1 Murtaugh run over the next four minutes put an end to any serious hope the Blue Devils had of a comeback.

While Murtaugh pulled away with strong play down the stretch, Dietrich did itself no favors, missing numerous layups and free throws in the final half.

"We had good shots," said Dietrich head coach Shawn Thompson. "But you've got to make your layups and you've got to make your free throws."

In all, Dietrich hit just 6 of 14 free throws Wednesday. Murtaugh connected on 20 of 31 from the line. Dilworth led the Blue Devils with 11 points. Ben Hoskisson added 10, including three three-pointers.

Camas County 66, Castleford 62

Freshman Elvis Medina exploded for 34 points in regulation, but flamed out in overtime as Castleford dropped a 66-62 heartbreaker to Camas County in Game 2.

Down 53-50 with two seconds remaining, Medina knocked down a wide open three-pointer from the right wing as the buzzer sounded to force an extra frame.

"We had a mental lapse (on that shot)," said Camas County head coach Jon Botz. "That let them back in the game."

Halfway through the overtime period, however, the Castleford star picked up his fourth foul, then bumped an official while arguing the call. The act earned Medina a technical foul and an early exit. He finished with a game-high 35 points and left the game with his team up one, 56-55.

"Elvis Medina had a great game," said Castleford head coach Andy Wiseman. "He carried us in the first half and down the stretch."

After Medina's exit, the Mushers tied the game on a Brandon Blodgett free throw, then took the lead for good on a free throw from senior Travis Tate, 57-56. Gaining momentum, Camas County then put together a 7-3 run over the next minute to take a 64-59 lead with 21 seconds remaining.

A long three-pointer by Castleford's Lee Taylor cut the lead to two, 64-62, with nine seconds left, but that would be as close as the Wolves would come as Josh Ivie closed out the scoring with two free throws just before the final buzzer sounded.

Ivie scored 17 points in the win, while teammate Tate added a team-high 20.

"We were able to keep out composure," Botz said. "But if we were able to hit our free throws, we wouldn't have been in that position."

The Times-News

BUHL – Katie Sailor, Hailey Campbell, Bryann Anderson, Micah Alexander and Darren Peterson have been chosen to participate in People to People Sports Ambassadors soccer tournaments this year, the first time anyone from Buhl has been chosen to take part in the international program.

Sailor, the daughter of Melvin and Ramona Sailor, is a Buhl High School graduate and a freshman at the College of Southern Idaho. Although she played both halfback and halfback, she excelled as the sweeper when Buhl's Lady Rage soccer team took third place in the Class A-3 girls' state championships in 1998. She plans to play soccer in Sweden.

Campbell, the daughter of Don and Diane Campbell, is a sophomore at Buhl High School. She has played both years at he varsity level, helping the Lady Rage to third-place state finishes in both 1998 and 1999. As a goalkeeper in the 1999 championships, Campbell was named to the All-Tournament Team. Campbell too will play soccer in Sweden.

Buhl athletes, in back row, Hailey Campbell, Katie Sailor and Darren Peterson; front row, Bryann Andersen and Micah Alexander, have been chosen to take part in the People to People Sports Ambassadors soccer tournaments this year.

Anderson, the daughter of Debby Compton and Michael Anderson, is a freshman at Buhl High School. With seven years of soccer experience, Anderson played halfback for the Lady Rage, scoring twice in the state tournament. She'll play in Holland.

Alexander, the son of Steve and Kathy Alexander, is also a freshman at Buhl High School. A 10-year veteran of the game, he hopes to attend college on a soccer scholarship. Alexander plan to play soccer in Germany.

Peterson, son of Donna Peterson and Ron Peterson, is a sophomore at Buhl High School. Another 10-year veteran, he became the starting goalie for the Buhl High School varsity team his freshman year and helped his team take third place in the state A-3 soccer championships. His coach named him Most Valuable Player; he has been accepted to play soccer in Australia.

How to help

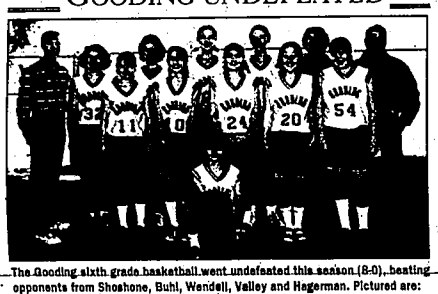

Buhl soccer players are raising the money needed to travel to Sweden, Holland and Germany for the tournaments. Each player is working to raise funds through various civic groups, organizations, businesses and individuals. Each student will need to raise approximately $3500 to participate. Individuals or groups wishing to help may mail their sponsorship to the following address, or deposit contributions directly into a specially established First Security Bank account.

The People to People Sports Ambassadors program was founded in 1956 by U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower. It was administered by the U.S. State Department until 1961, when it became a private, nonprofit organization. The tournaments involve many sports, including soccer, basketball, football, baseball, softball, volleyball, golf, wrestling, track and field and bowling.

Each program includes a balanced combination of clinics, competitive events and cultural visits.

Gooding hoops player is headed Down Under

By Maighain Arkoosh
Times-News correspondent

GOODING – Entering Gooding High School at 7 a.m., you would expect almost complete silence, since school doesn't start for another hour.

But as you continued to listen, you would begin to hear the rhythm of a basketball hitting the gym floor.

Brian Byrne, a Gooding junior recently selected for the NBC Camps Boys' Senior Tour, not only attends his team's scheduled practices and games, but is in the gym every morning working on his skills.

When another opportunity for improvement arrived, Byrne grabbed it. While attending an NBC Camp in the summer of 1999, it was announced that tryouts for NBC Camp's International Tours would be held.

Along with more than 700 other young athletes throughout the Northwest, Alaska, Canada, and California, Byrne tried out for the Senior Tour to Australia.

As part of those tryouts, Byrne auditioned in front of NBC coaches and filled out a questionnaire asking his reasons for wanting to play on the team. He later received notice that he had made the first cut.

From there, he was required to turn in letters of recommendation, parental permission, and eligibility-to-travel forms. According to Byrne, around 20 athletes were chosen for the tour.

KIMBERLY ROSTI/The Times-News

Brian Byrne, a Gooding High School junior, has been selected for the NBC Camps Boys' Senior Tour.

After making the team, Byrne started raising funds to cover the cost of his trip, accepting personal and business donations.

"This trip will be a great opportunity to see the world and to play against some of the best competitors in Australia," Byrne said.

As part of the International Tour, Byrne, along with his all-star teammates, will travel to Australia on June 4 and compete with some of Australia's top boys' basketball teams.

Also enthusiastic about Byrne's upcoming trip is Gooding High School varsity boys' coach Joe Messick.

"The trip will be an excellent experience for Brian," he said. "Not only will he develop better skills, but he will also be given the opportunity to see another part of the world."

Newcomers to Idaho settle into state's lifestyle

LET'S GO BOWLING
Thelma Tucker

About a year ago, a couple of new faces appeared in the bowling center. This couple, Dick and Char DeRoche, joined a league, and as you watched, you knew they were not new at he game.

So curiosity took over and it became necessary to learn more about them. I asked them to make me some notes on their background – and one item I asked for specifically was, "What brought you to Twin Falls?"

The following is their story.

"We lived in Proctor, Minn., all our lives. We have five children, four girls, Dawne (California), Margo (New Hampshire), Debbie (Minnesota), and Darla (Twin Falls). Our son Michael lives in Arizona. Daughter Darla has relocated here from Alaska and it was she who encouraged us to move to Idaho.

She told us the weather was better, the people were friendlier, many golf courses, hunting and fishing was good and two bowling lanes. In September of 1998 we came down to look, see, and found everything she said to be true.

So we arrived on New Years Day 1999 driving a 29-foot Ryder truck and towing an old Subaru behind. We moved into a new home (sight unseen) in Kimberly which had just been completed two days before we arrived.

We met most of our neighbors the first week (incredible). We're told, if you don't want to talk to folks you better stay inside. Some of our most fun times have been at the Bowladrome with a great bunch of people. We each are currently bowling two leagues. After being away from the game so long (28 years for Dick and longer for Char), we were amazed the way the game has changed. Crankers – new equipment, etc.

Great people – but – lousy drivers! We've caught trout and shot pheasants and taken scenic drives. Idaho is all right."

Those of us who have spent our lives in Idaho know it's great, but isn't it nice to hear it from others? Dick and Char, you are a tremendous asset to our valley and to the game of bowling. Welcome to our world!

Democrats to select convention delegates

TWIN FALLS – Local Democrats will meet at 7:30 p.m. March 7 to elect delegates to the state Democratic Convention.

The meeting, announced by Democratic Chairwoman Carole Stennett, will be the Obenchain Building in downtown Twin Falls. Any person who is a Democrat and a qualified voter may participate.

Power transformer temporarily shuts down

SUN VALLEY – An Idaho Power transformer in Ketchum blew out Wednesday temporarily shutting down Sun Valley ski resorts as powderhounds frolicked in 11 inches of new snow.

Skiers bumbled around in darkened restrooms inside Warm Springs Lodge and about a dozen skiers were stranded for more than a half hour on the Greyhawk chairlift.

The power outage came during one of Sun Valley's busiest weeks of the year. Hundreds of vacationing families from San Francisco and Seattle are in town for "Ski Week."

But the blackout came at a convenient time, occurring at about noon. Skiers who took an hour off for lunch found the lifts ready to mount up again just before 1:30 p.m.

"Actually, I didn't mind it at all," said Brent Wilson, of San Francisco, as he prepared to board one of the buses dispatched to return skiers to the lodge and other locations. "My legs were shot by noon from all that powder skiing."

Blaine prosecutor says he won't seek re-election

HAILEY – Blaine County is looking for a new prosecuting attorney after Doug Werth announced he will not run for re-election this fall.

Werth, 38, said he has always wanted to hang up his shingle and decided "it's the time." He said he plans to open a private practice in Blaine County after his term is up in 11 months.

During Werth's five-year tenure, he has worked with the Domestic Violence Task Force and the Blaine County Child Abuse Commission.

Sun Valley reaches agreement with Picabo

SUN VALLEY – Sun Valley has reached an amicable agreement with Olympic gold medalist Picabo Street. The agreement will probably be signed Friday, said Sun Valley Marketing Director Jack Sibbach.

Street, who grew up skiing on Bald Mountain, filed a lawsuit against the Sun Valley Company and its parent company Sinclair Oil late last year, complaining that the resort had printed ads with the sentence "I carved the same slopes as Picabo Street." Street said she had not authorized the use of her name.

Street, now on the payroll of Park City's ski resort, has said she intends to use the money for charitable purposes, perhaps youth ski racing.

Special meeting for skiers, snowboarders

KETCHUM – A special meeting for backcountry skiers, snowshoers and snowboarders will be held at 7 tonight at Ketchum City Hall.

Backcountry users are being asked to develop a winter recreation map proposing areas that should be closed to snowmobile use. Sawtooth National Forest Supervisor Bill LeVere has asked for the map, which would be similar to the Sawtooth Winter Recreation Partnership map which outlined ski areas in which local snowmobile clubs agreed not to ride.

If the snowmobilers and other backcountry users can reach an agreement specified areas would be banned to motorized use during winter. If not, the Forest Service may make the decision for them.

Report focuses on students

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Test scores and reaching struggling students were some of the key issues addressed Wednesday by two of the school district's newest head principals.

Kent Anderson, principal at I.B. Perrine Elementary School, and Harrison Elementary School Principal Christine Gillette updated the School Board on goals targeted by the two schools. Both principals said they stepped into their new jobs at schools already posting high scores on standardized tests in many areas and that their challenge is to sustain the results.

Anderson, who last year was the vice principal at Perrine, said his goals to have 100 percent of students reading at grade level, actively reading library books and improving math computation skills by the end of the school year are lofty, but that he is idealistic.

"Personally, I would rather shoot too high and miss my target than shoot too low and not challenge kids," he said.

Anderson cited a number of results from different tests used in the district that show steady or sustained growth in student skills at Perrine. He also listed a number of intervention programs such as after-school tutoring, foster grandparents, math drills and counseling services for students who need the help.

The focus on achievement data is needed, Anderson said, but it does put pressure on teachers. And some of the accompanying anxiety and frustration also can be felt by students, he said.

The focus creates a sense of urgency for teachers and makes classroom instruction more intentional, said Beth Olmstead,

Situation looks good for bighorn

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Only a few days after the long-awaited release of 30 bighorn sheep on Jim Sage Mountain, three have died.

But Idaho Department of Fish and Game officials say the deaths do not bode ill for repopulation efforts in the area.

A lamb and a ewe were eaten by an 18-month-old male mountain lion a few miles south of the release site, according to Randy Smith, regional wildlife manager with the Jerome office of Fish and Game.

A third sheep died after becoming caught in what Smith said is a normal fence that shouldn't have posed a risk to wildlife. That incident was a "freak accident," Smith said.

The threat of mountain lions had been assessed before release, Smith said. Fish and Game officials said they had the benefit of Idaho State University mountain lion research in the area.

"That's a luxury we aren't often afforded," Smith said.

At least two other female mountain lions live on the mountain, to Fish and Game's knowledge. They have radio monitors, he said.

After extensive planning in preparation for the release, 30 sheep were relocated from John Day Canyon in Oregon to Jim Sage Mountain, southeast of Burley, Feb. 6 and Feb. 8. The mountain is native turf for the California bighorns, which thrived there a century ago.

The relocation was a team effort by Fish and Game, the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep, former sheep ranchers Joyce and Roscoe Ward and other agencies.

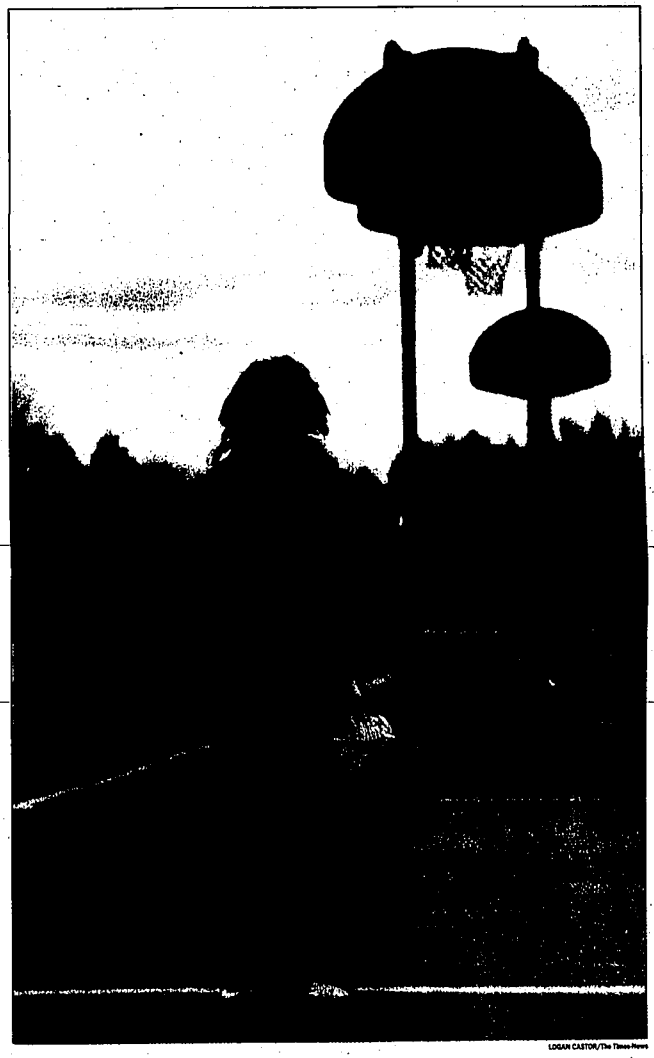

Although saddened by the deaths so soon after the release, Herb Meyr of the foundation's Idaho chapter said it's not uncommon for 10 percent of a new release to die within the first year.

It takes time for sheep new to an area to grow accustomed to their habitat, and learn how to defend it against predators, Meyr said. Mountain lions mainly prey on deer, but until sheep learn to use the area's cover, they are easy targets.

Fish and Game officials and the foundation expect the Jim Sage repopulation to be a success – barring disease and a harsh winter that wipes out deer,

Area health officials shift approach

By Jay Howser
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Area health officials are shifting their approach to health care.

As part of the Healthy People 2010 program developed by the federal government, health workers will work to address high-risk behaviors that lead to illness instead of just focusing on the illnesses themselves.

The South Central District Health Department introduced the program at its board meeting Wednesday.

The plan contains 467 health objectives in all, too high a number for many small communities to adequately deal with, said Maggi Machala, the health department's community health director.

The government has listed 10 specific factors as leading health indicators: physical activity, overweight conditions and obesity, tobacco use, substance abuse, responsible sexual behavior, mental health, environmental quality, injury and violence, immunization and access to health care.

The health district is reviewing the program's objectives to develop a plan for implementation based on the needs of the counties in the district, Machala said.

In other business:

- The board is moving forward with plans to install hand washing stations near the petting zoo at the Twin Falls County Fair this September. The health district hopes it will raise awareness of the dangers of disease transmission after handling livestock. The board will continue to work out details to develop a complete plan.
- The results of a survey from the Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children were presented to the board. Published earlier this month, the survey provides data on health problems for WIC participants from 1997-1998 in diverse categories.
- The board heard the results of a food establishment survey, which offers reactions to health district inspections.
- Proposed activities for Public Health Week, April 2-8, were presented. They included plans for public health awards and a tour for legislators.

Ketchum: Who will replace bridge?

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – Eighty Ketchum property owners could be paying $329 apiece – or more, in a few cases – for a new Broadway Bridge.

The Ketchum City Council has decided to go ahead with a local improvement district, asking property owners to share in the costs of replacing the dilapidated bridge, ordered closed last fall.

But the council Tuesday decided the city should pay for 90 percent of the costs, after listening to impassioned pleas about the important role the bridge plays in neighborhood traffic flow. The closure has forced traffic from 36 of the 91 parcels in an area bordered by Exhibition, Sunnyside and Broadway boulevards to deviate from their normal traffic pattern, Councilman David Hutchinson said.

Its closure has also impacted residents who live along Warm Springs Road because it has funneled more traffic to that road; resident Karen McCall told the council.

A protest hearing will be set for March 20. If two-thirds of the property owners in the area disagree with forming the local improvement district, the council will review other options. But based on a show of hands, most of the 30-plus residents who attended the council meeting seemed willing to pay a small portion of the price to replace the bridge f

Earlier the council had considered asking residents to pay 40 percent of the costs, which could have amounted to as much as $1,319 per parcel on a $300,000 bridge. The costs would be divvied up among 80 property owners who own 91 parcels, with some landowners paying more than once.

But after listening to many of the residents who crowded into City Hall, council members decided to rethink their earlier strategy.

"The neighborhood was built for two accesses, and I'm impressed that the neighborhood is willing to pay if they have to," councilman Randy Hall said.

"The bridge is not necessary for safety – the fire chief told us he has not used the Broadway Bridge in years Ó I don't think you really need it but it enhances the neighborhood," added councilman Maurice Charlat.

Allowing residents to share in costs would give them the right to pick a bridge that will be a neighborhood asset. If the council picks up the full tab, residents won't get a say in what the bridge looks like, Hutchinson added.

Sex offender goes to prison

By Brian Haynes
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – In 1997 Donnell "Bud" Stradley avoided prison after pleading guilty to molesting a young girl, but after missing too many trips to sex offender treatment the 36-year-old man is headed to the big house.

Stradley was required to attend regular sex offender treatment as a condition of his probation for his 1997 conviction for lewd conduct with a minor under 16. State probation officers began noticing Stradley's "sporadic" attendance late last year.

"Mr. Stradley does not appear to be taking sex offender treatment very seriously," probation officer Pamela Huntsman said in her report.

Stradley admitted to the violation two weeks ago, and on Tuesday District Judge Daniel Meehl revoked Stradley's probation and imposed the original sentence of three to seven years in prison.

Stradley will get credit for the 180 days he served at a state boot camp and the following year he spent in the Twin Falls County jail.

A grand jury indicted Stradley in 1997 on two counts of lewd conduct with a minor under 16 in the molestation of two girls, ages 6 and 9, whom he baby-sat.

Five years earlier Stradley was charged with first-degree murder in the death of his girlfriend's 2-year-old daughter, Amanda Hostetler, who died from a massive blow to the belly. A jury acquitted him on all charges after a three-week trial.

But his girlfriend, Jodie Ann Hostetler, spent nearly five years in prison after pleading guilty to felony child abuse.

Gooding board tables police policy

By Aimee Wilson
Times-News correspondent

GOODING – The Gooding School Board again tabled its police interview policy for students, after member Fineas Hughbanks objected to the plan.

The policy would not allow police to interview students without a parent or guardian present. However, the policy would not apply to a police "school resource officer" who is assigned to a school campus.

The proposal has received a chilly response.

Gooding Police Officer Rick Cowen said the rules were a bit too restrictive.

Hughbanks, meanwhile, objected to allowing an officer to interview any student, without a parent's or guardian's approval. The proposed policy not only exempts resource officers, but allows a district superintendent to authorize police interviews in "extenuating circumstances."

The School Board will call Wendell and Jerome police to check their policies and attempt to come up with an acceptable policy.

In other School Board business:

• The school calendar for 2000-01 was approved.

School will begin Aug. 23. Christmas holiday will begin Dec. 22 with classes resuming Jan. 2. Spring Break is scheduled from March 26 through 30. Last day of school will be May 25.

This schedule deviates from a common school schedule which is being considered by several Magic Valley districts.

• The board discussed general goals to make high school senior year more difficult, and raise general standards.

• Gooding Realtor Anthony Fitzgerald bid $28,500 cash for two Main Street properties, at the site of the old Frahm Middle School. Attorney Craig Hobdey recommended the board negotiate.

The board then recessed for a closed executive session to discuss the matter.

Kimberly city ponders possibility of funding for city improvements

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY – The city would like to build some new sidewalks and update its aging sewer system. But first it must find a way to pay for them.

The City Council on Tuesday discussed grant resources that might help fund city improvements. Susan Riddle of Region Four Development and Tracy Ehrens of J.U.B. Engineers discussed requirements that must be met in order to obtain grants.

Maintenance Supervisor Rob Wright said the old concrete sewer pipe is badly deteriorated. He said the sewer line on north Oak Street collapsed and had to be replaced last fall. Riddle will begin the process of applying for grants this week.

Also Tuesday, engineer Orlin Clements outlined plans for the Vista View Estates subdivision north of Kimberly. The council approved the preliminary plans.

The council also discussed the annual Good Neighbor Days celebration. The council said the tradition, which had been sponsored for years by the now-disbanded Chamber of Commerce, should be continued but shouldn't be sponsored by the council. The council decided to reach out to individuals and organizations in the community to help with the annual celebration.

Kimberly continues with ARTEC

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY – The district will continue to offer Advanced Regional Technical Education Coalition classes in Kimberly schools.

The School Board approved a new ARTEC agreement at Tuesday's meeting. Superintendent John Garner discussed strategic planning for ARTEC which was initially funded by the Albertson Foundation but in the future will need to be funded by the district.

Also Tuesday, accountant Bonnie Peters discussed revisions made to the 1999-2000 fiscal year budget. The board approved the revised budget.

In other action Tuesday, the board approved the final reading of the immunization policy and accepted the Parent-Teacher-Student Organization's "Parent to Parent" handbook, a book to assist parents and students on issues such as drugs, alcohol, curfews and dating. The board agreed to help the PTSO pay for the booklets.

Also Tuesday, the board agreed to hold a workshop on district goals on April 15.

Castleford board discusses fair tradition

By Mickey Brown
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD – The annual Twin Falls County Fair has always been a major event for members of 4-H and Future Farmers of America.

This year's fair will open on Aug. 28, two days into the new school year. The School Board on Tuesday examined ways to allow young people to participate in fair activities without disrupting their studies or negatively impacting their attendance records.

"There has been some discussion of moving the 4-H children to enter on Thursday night and show the next two days instead of on Tuesday and showing during mid-week," said board member Scott Tverdy. "However, that won't get done this year. We're going to have to deal with the situation."

When they meet

The Castleford School Board will hold its next meeting at 7 p.m. March 21 in the school library.

Superintendent Kelly Murphey agreed the district should find some way to make it easier for students to participate in the fair.

"Fair week is a big part of our school's tradition and if we need to move our calendar a little bit to accommodate those days then we need to consider that," Murphey said. "The fair is a priority and we'll have to work with our kids."

The board considered several options including allowing excused absences with accelerated homework, marking days missed as unexcused absences, or changing the date of the first day of school. The board was unable to reach a consensus and will bring the issue back for discussion at the March meeting.

Other School Board business:

• The board accepted the resignation of head volleyball coach Stacey Ruffing.

• Board members approved an exchange student from Columbia to attend Castleford High School during the 2000-2001 school year.

• The board approved the rehiring of Principal Andy Wiseman and District Clerk Brenda Thomson.

• The board approved the itinerary for the senior sneak to Boise.

BLISS

Gilbert Jaramillo

Gilbert Jaramillo, 65, of Bliss died February 21, 2000

Gilbert was born May 1, 1934, in Santa Paula, Calif., the son of Francisco Felix Jaramillo and Petra Martinez, both of California. He was raised by his grandparents and aunt after the death of his mother. Gil began working for the Simi Valley School District at age 17. At 20, Gil spent four years in the Army trucking gold bullion through France and Germany. He also earned the distinguished Expert Rifleman award. Gil returned to driving a bus, won many driving awards, and soon became the driving instructor. He retired from the School District after 27 years, and moved to Bliss, Idaho, in 1978, with wife Jerry and son Tom. After six years in the farming industry, Gil joined the Bliss School District as bus driver, custodian, and eventually lunchroom cook. He had been there ever since, and was very happy, making many friends, both young and old. Music was very important to Gil. He made his first guitar out of a cigar box and screen door wire at age 10. He would sing and play his favorite Spanish and Western style songs for anyone who asked. He performed in many small venues in California and Idaho, including cafes, school functions and parades. Gil also played bit parts acting in a western town attraction in California.

He is survived by his sister, Pauline Hernandez of Simi Valley, Calif., and her eight children; former wife Jerry Lou Jaramillo of Bliss; step-son Steve Oxarart of Carson City, Nev.; and son Tom Jaramillo of Boise.

Memorial services will be held at 1 p.m. Friday, Feb. 25, 2000, at the Bliss School Gymnasium.

In lieu of flowers, he would have loved for his friends to make donations to the Bliss School Music Department, or leave an extra tip for the waitresses at the OxBow Cafe.

Ketchum considers ban on smoking

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – Ketchum could be on the verge of snuffing out smoking in restaurants and bars.

The City Council voted unanimously Tuesday night to set a fire under efforts to draft a resolution that would ban smoking from such public places. Council members would like to have a resolution suitable for public comment by their March 6 meeting.

The measure would look out for the health concerns of those who work in Ketchum restaurants and bars, said council member David Hutchinson. He said people don't have a lot choices where they make the living in Ketchum and if "asbestos was hanging from the ceiling in the Pioneer Saloon" the city would close it down immediately. He said with smoking, there might as well be asbestos hanging from the ceiling.

Hailey resident Randy Van Dyke initiated the discussion, presenting a petition of a couple hundred names supporting such a resolution that he gathered at Ketchum bars.

Van Dyke presented a similar petition to the council 12 years ago, but the council passed on it. Now, he said, it's time to address it again with studies showing that second-hand smoke is more hazardous than filtered smoke and with California's recent move to prohibit smoking in the public places statewide.

John Craig, manager of the popular Pioneer Saloon prime rib restaurant and bar, said inhaling patrons' smoke for the past 20 years has adversely affected his health.

"It's like having INEEL outside your house," he said.

People who patronize a restaurant or bar have a choice, but employees don't have a choice, said Ketchum resident Karen McCall.

Councilman Randy Hall said he was uncomfortable trying to legislate good behavior and morality but the benefit to the public far outweighed such concerns in this case.

Councilman Maurice Charlat added that he would like to see business employers go one step further and meet with Wood River Valley youth to explore ways to mount an effective "smoking isn't cool" campaign.

Judge says two-tier, ton-mile trucking tax unconstitutional

BOISE (AP) – A 4th District Judge has declared Idaho's two-tiered ton-mile truck tax unconstitutional, ruling that interstate truckers are essentially excluded from being able to pay the lower rate.

The decision by Judge Michael McLaughlin is still not final, and the actual refund due to long-haul truckers may not be determined for another year or more. But state transportation and legal experts say the state's liability could hit $80 million for overcharges dating back to 1993.

Unless sidestepped through some kind of settlement with the American Trucking Associations Inc., the result could be another increase in the gasoline tax or vehicle registration fees.

Key lawmakers met late Wednesday with Transportation Department officials and Deputy Attorney General Michael Gilmore to be briefed on the ruling.

While the decision will be appealed, they were told that chances were less than even that the state would prevail in the end.

"We need to brace ourselves," Senate Republican Floor Leader James Risch of Boise said, "and make the decision to go forward knowing that we have a system that is unconstitutional."

McLaughlin ordered that the state cease using the two-tiered system by next Wednesday, terminating further accrual of liability. The state likely will ask for additional time to restructure its tax collecting system to accommodate the order and will probably begin charging all truckers the higher fee. That will produce roughly $2 million more a year in revenue.

The judge found that while 54 percent of Idaho-based carriers were charged the lower tax for so-called limited commodity loads like agriculture, timber and other products on grounds that those trucks do less road damage, only 7 percent of the out-of-state-based carriers benefited from the lower rate.

"The special rate does discriminate in its practical effect between interstate and local trucking operations," McLaughlin wrote. He said it puts interstate truckers at a disadvantage in what he called an "industry that thrives in the free market system."

He also found no evidence to support the state's claim that limited commodity haulers cause less damage to highways during the two-week trial last November.

With the prospect all but nil for collecting the higher tax from all those truckers who paid the now-unconstitutional lower charge the past eight years, Senate Transportation Chairman Evan Frasure of Pocatello said if the state is forced to refund overcharges, "we're going to have to raise the fuel tax or registration fees."

Gilmore said the state will likely be allowed to pay off any refund liability over time, although he did not know how long the repayment period could be drawn out.

But he also said there was an outside chance that a negotiated settlement could be reached with interstate truckers, whose primary objective has been replacing the ton-mile tax with some kind of annual registration fee.

OSHA hopes ergonomic project will prevent work-related injuries

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Jerrold Hockett tells the story about his newspaper-delivering son's time-saving method for getting rubber bands around the papers.

But over time, his son began experiencing pain in his fingers which hampered his softball game.

When Hockett's son discovered his way of rolling newspapers was limiting his finger movement, he gave up the time-saving method and the pain went away.

The problem was a musculoskeletal disorder, an injury resulting from long-term, repetitive activities. It's a problem that may be responsible for up to one-third of all serious work-related injuries, and causes 600,000 workers to miss work, according to statistics from the U.S. Department of Labor's Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

It's also a problem that has prompted OSHA into a seven-year project to devise an ergonomic standard, one that will hopefully prevent injuries resulting from job functions that are "a core part of (a worker's) job day in and day out," said Hockett, a regional industrial hygienist at OSHA's Boise-area office.

"You don't always associate what you're doing with what happened to you," Hockett told local industry and business leaders Wednesday at a workshop hosted by the McCain Foods potato processing plant in Burley.

The bottom line is the need to educate both employers and employees on how to prevent such injuries, said Reuben Saldana, loss prevention manager for McCain Foods. The standard is a win-win situation, he said.

OSHA expects the standard to go into effect by the end of this year, after three public hearings across the country and after all public comment is received.

Although implementing the standard would cost employers an average of $4.2 billion a year, the rules are expected to prevent 300,000 of those disorders, saving employers $9 billion, Hockett said.

It would be up to the employer and the treating physician to determine whether an injury results directly from the employee's job, Hockett said. But that is not a black-and-white issue, he said.

Hockett anticipates there will be controversy surrounding the requirement, which employers pay 100 percent of an employee's pay and benefits when an employee comes back to work to perform only "light duty" following an injury. The standard also requires the employer to pay 90 percent of an employee's pay and 100 percent of an employee's benefits if the injury forces the employee to take time off.

The standard also prevents the practice of firing a worker if he or she returns to work after time off from an injury and the symptoms persist.

Dr. Howard Leaman, medical director of the Intermountain Health Care WorkMed, questioned whether that would affect temporary agencies that hire workers for highly-repetitive jobs for three months as a screening technique. Hockett admitted he was unsure how the standard would affect that.

The standards will not apply to all workers. Certain manufacturing and manual lifting jobs will be covered, as well as other employers with one or more workers who experience a muscular skeletal disorder, according to OSHA.

Kraft Foods already implements most of what is contained in the proposed ergonomic standards, said John Shell, safety training coordinator at the Rupert plant. For more than three years, Kraft has had safety teams, including an ergonomics team comprised of everyone from management to hourly employees.

Ergonomics issues have dropped drastically in that time, and Kraft's team approach to safety in general has drawn interest from other cheese plants looking to employ the same method, said Jennie Schow, a member of the ergonomics team.

Burley man faces sexual assault charges

The Times-News

BURLEY – A Burley man was charged Wednesday with two counts of sexual abuse of a minor under the age of 16 and awaits an arraignment next month.

Gary Douglas Lynch, 45, was charged Wednesday in connection with fondling one pre-teen girl between April 1991 and April 1993 and fondling another pre-teen girl between August 1991 and August 1993, according to a sworn complaint signed by Cassia County Prosecutor Stephen Bywater.

According to a sworn affidavit also signed by Bywater, both victims told the prosecutor that Lynch had fondled them. Lynch, a Rupert car salesman, declined to comment on the charges Wednesday evening.

Lynch has been summoned to appear at a March 13 arraignment, according to a court document. He will be arrested only if he fails to appear at that hearing, the document said.

Ketchum City wants to look at church design

KETCHUM – The City Council wants to review the design of the Presbyterian Church of the Big Wood's expansion before it okays a land swap between the church and the city.

The church, located next to the Ketchum Skate Park at Warm Springs and Saddle roads, wants to swap a triangular parcel of land that its members use for parking for a piece of land abutting the Big Wood River. The land the church wants to swap provides important access for fishermen. The area, known as The Rock, could be made into a small park, council members said on Wednesday. The city has no use for the triangular portion of land that it owns and it would be difficult to sell unless the city were to sell it to the church, said councilman David Hutchinson.

Church representatives said they would be willing to put a path from the parking lot to the area known as The Rock. Expansion plans include a new sanctuary, offices and community area.

Utah man faces life in prison for hiring hitman

FARMINGTON, Utah (AP) – Paul Allen hid his face in his hands as his conviction of aggravated murder was read aloud Wednesday morning.

Allen, 30, could spend the rest of his life in prison for hiring a hitman to kill his wife, Jill Allen. Prosecutors said Allen did it to collect $250,000 in insurance money.

"I've always believed pride and the love of money is the root of all evil and Paul is no exception," the victim's mother, Andrea Myler, said Wednesday after the verdict was read.

Members of Paul Allen's family left without speaking to reporters, fending off cameras as they exited the Farmington courthouse. Defense attorney Ron Yengich said his client was disappointed, but accepted the verdict.

The six-man, six-woman jury deliberated about 10 hours, starting at 1 p.m. Tuesday. Jurors went home after about eight hours and started again at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday, reaching their unanimous verdict just after 10 a.m.

"I felt good about the case from the start," said Assistant County Attorney Bill McGuire, who prosecuted the case. "We're just glad the jury agreed with us."

Allen's sentencing was scheduled to start this morning. Prosecutors will ask jurors to send him to prison for life without the possibility of parole.

"Any man who calculates and pays to have his wife killed deserves to stay in prison for the rest of his life," McGuire said.

Prosecutors said Allen offered his friend Joseph Wright $30,000 to find someone to kill his wife.

Wright testified during the trial that he offered George Anthony Taylor $10,000 to do the actual killing. Taylor testified that on Aug. 28, 1996 – after stalking his victim for weeks – he let himself into the Allens' North Salt Lake apartment and beat Jill Allen with a baseball bat, then strangled her to death with a belt.

During the two-week trial, Yengich argued that Allen, a successful cellular phone salesman making $75,000 a year, had no need for the insurance money and no reason to kill his wife.

Management plan dismays conservationist

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) – A new management plan that would allow logging, mining and grazing to continue in the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area is drawing sharp criticism from conservationists and praise from Wallowa County, Ore. officials.

The plan, drafted by Wallowa-Whitman National Forest officials and made public this week, has been in the works for six years. It would regulate use of an area that showcases North America's deepest river canyon and draws hordes of backpackers and whitewater enthusiasts each summer.

Mary O'Brien, a botanist who has lobbied for its preservation, expressed dismay after her first look at the more than 1,200-page Forest Service draft plan.

"The Wallowa-Whitman is proposing to go the opposite direction than the U.S. Forest Service nationally," O'Brien said.

She said agency officials are beginning to recognize the value of native grass lands, yet local Forest Service personnel responsible for Hells Canyon propose to allow cattle to graze where they have not been in 20 years.

O'Brien authored a management plan that conservationists proposed for Hells Canyon on the Idaho-Oregon border. It placed a high priority on protecting native plants and animals and would have limited livestock, logging and certain recreational activities.

Fearing the conservationists' plan would cripple the area's precarious timber, mining, ranching and tourist economy, Wallowa County officials put forward their own management blueprint.

"The myth is out there that communities like ours, dependent upon natural resources, can simply convert to a tourist economy," Wallowa County Commissioner Ben Boswell said.

Boswell said the latest plan appears to incorporate much of what county officials wanted.

In addition to allowing selected timber harvests and mining on existing claims, the plan proposes to maintain 363 of the 533 miles of roads. County officials had called for maintaining slightly more. The conservationists' plan stressed far fewer.

The Forest Service plan proposes an additional two miles of trails, while maintaining the existing 925-mile trail system. The county plan proposed the same. The conservationists proposed no new trails and wanted existing one maintained at minimum standards.

In addition, the Forest Service plan would allow cattle and sheep to graze on 301,021 acres, matching the county's desires. One option in the conservationists' proposal eliminated sheep grazing and cut the number of acres available for cattle grazing to 146,261.

The Forest Service proposal does not address jet-boating on the Snake, a point of contention for more than 20 years. Officials said a policy adopted in 1998 banning those boats on some days from the wildest segment of the river would continue.

The public will have 120 days to comment on the draft document. The comments will be incorporated into the final version, which is to be completed this fall.

who moved from the classroom to be vice principal at both Perrine and Oregon Trail elementary schools this year.

Goals at Harrison include improvement in reading and math skills, said Gillette, who comes to the district after teaching in the Wood River Valley. But gains in math were hard to demonstrate on the standardized tests when student scores last year at all grades tested fell in the highest possible national ranking. Hanging onto those skills should be the focus, she said. This year scores remained upwards of the 90 percentile rank.

The school used more than $27,500 from grants and its budget to buy new books for its library and classrooms, Gillette said. The library now is more accessible to students so they can check out books throughout the day and before and after school rather than only during class library time. Teachers spend more time on reading instruction, which now is taught at least two hours daily. Students who need extra assistance with their reading skills have been placed in small reading groups according to their abilities.

Student assistance groups are offered for youngsters struggling with a number of issues such as divorce or drug and alcohol abuse, Gillette said. Twenty-five students are involved. Two groups have been formed for students who have incarcerated parents. The school also coordinated delivery of its services for at-risk students.

forcing sheep to become a key food source. When a sheep population reaches its peak, or 125 on Jim Sage Mountain, the lions help keep the population in check, Meyr said. Officials hope the population grows by 30 percent every year until the peak is reached.

To reduce the threat of a mountain lion introduced to the taste of sheep, Fish and Game trapped and euthanized the lion last week, Smith said. The sheep were thought to be dead after a motion-sensitive feature on their radio collars sent out a "mortality signal" after the sheep had been still for quite a while, Smith said. Fish and Game officials investigated and discovered how the sheep had been killed.

New Forest Service supervisor looks at Elko road

SPARKS, Nev. (AP) – The new Forest Service supervisor in Nevada says he is not ruling out the possibility of rebuilding the washed-out road at the center of a dispute over a threatened fish in Elko County.

"I'd like to make sure that everything is on the table," said Robert Vaught, supervisor of the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest.

The Forest Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service concluded a year ago that the South Canyon Road near Jarbidge could not be rebuilt without jeopardizing the survival of the threatened bull trout.

"The way I'm approaching it is I'm new," Vaught said in a recent interview at the national forest's headquarters in Sparks.

"I want to look at all the information we have, how it was done, what the conclusions were. I want to have some additional discussions with the Fish and Wildlife Service," Vaught said.

"I really don't know yet the answer to the question of whether we've looked at all the possibilities or not," he said.

The 1.5-mile stretch of road runs in a narrow canyon along the Jarbidge River just south of the Idaho border. The river is home to the only known population of bull trout in Nevada and the southernmost population of the fish in North America.

A federal judge in Reno issued a temporary restraining order in October when State Assemblyman John Carpenter, R-Elko, and others organized a work party intent on rebuilding the road in defiance of the Forest Service. Judge David Hagen later ordered the Forest Service and Elko County into mediation.

"I hope Mr. Vaught's comments are a positive sign" for an eventual settlement in mediation, Kristin McQueary, Elko County's deputy district attorney, said Wednesday.

The Nevada Division of Wildlife opposes reconstruction of the road, but disagrees with the federal scientists' conclusion that the road would jeopardize the survival of the fish.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., asked the federal agencies last summer to go back and review the situation to try to come up with a way to rebuild the road and still protect the fish.

The assistant minority leader of the Senate told them money should be no object in their consideration of alternatives.

The federal scientists went back to the drawing board, but returned again with the same answer: No road.

Instead, they recommended a foot trail be constructed, perhaps one large enough to accommodate all-terrain vehicles.

"We came to the conclusion based on the research we know of that a road next to the river is always going to adversely affect the bull trout," said Bob Williams, Nevada state director for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

But in November, Reid repeated the challenge and Rep. Jim Gibbons, R-Nev., joined the call for the federal scientists to revisit the issue a third time.

"Money is not the problem," Reid said again. "I can get the money."

HAIL TO 'HAMP'!

Jazz great Lionel Hampton waves to the crowd after receiving a standing ovation when he was introduced at Hamp's Gala Tuesday at the University of Idaho in Moscow. Professor promotes 'humane beef'

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) – A Colorado philosophy professor says ranchers are missing a bet by not adopting humane cattle-raising practices and then marketing them to a public increasingly concerned with how animals are treated.

If ranchers would get rid of hot-iron branding, castration of bull calves and de-horning, they could sell their product as humane beef, said Bernard Rollin, a philosophy professor and veterinary ethicist at Colorado State University.

"Is this bad for the beef industry?" Rollin asked. "Emphatically not!"

Rollin contrasted the production of chicken and swine in total confinement conditions to range-raised beef, which already gives cattle producers an advantage. Eliminating practices that inflict pain would put beef producers on a higher moral ground, he said.

The biggest change Rollin suggested would end castration of bull calves and the use of growth implants in steers. In some European countries, he noted, beef is slaughtered young without the added cost of being grain-fed. And the beef is leaner.

De-horning cattle is already on the way out as most cattlemen have gone to naturally de-horned breeds because they are easier to work with.

Lead found in Coeur d'Alene playground

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) – There is enough lead in the soil of a playground near Mullan Elementary that it merits cleanup by summer, federal and school officials agree.

Topsoil there, covered by a layer of bark chips, exceeds federal safety thresholds, according to tests released recently by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The presence of lead and other heavy metals from decades of mining is not a surprise to the small mountain community. Health officials say there is no evidence the playground is harming the children. Just the same, Mullan educators reported the school board has approved cleanup starting this spring.

"We felt if they felt there was need, then we ought to go ahead and do it," Mullan High School principal Tom Durbin said. "They've been playing on it for decades. I don't think there's a major concern in the community about it." EPA officials told Mullan schools Superintendent Robin Stanley potentially dangerous amounts of lead showed up in the soil of several areas around the elementary and high school.

The Mullan playground poses enough of a risk that it needs cleanup by summer, before a huge basinwide study is released later this year, said Sean Sheldrake, EPA's regional Superfund program manager.

Beyond that, however, the risk is hard to pinpoint, he said.

Lead in the playground's top inch of soil averages 3,270 parts per million, and ranges as high as 11,900, EPA sampling found last September. Federal health officials recommend quick action whenever lead exceeds 2,000 parts per million.

Tests find tainted water at U of I's new food court

MOSCOW (AP) – Bacteria found in the drinking water marred what otherwise was a welcomed opening of a new food court at the University of Idaho.

School officials were notified midday Tuesday by the state Division of Environmental Quality that testing of the building's water system revealed detectable traces of coliform bacteria.

The $19.5 million Commons building houses student services, a copy center, art gallery, a satellite bookstore and the food court. The coliform indicates other, dangerous bacteria could be present. The food court features five dining vendors, all run by Sodexho Marriott.

All drinking fountains in the Commons and the University Classroom Center, which share a water distribution system, were disconnected. The water system had passed previous tests. Restrictions likely will be in effect until Thursday or Friday.

In the meantime, bottled water will be brought in for drinking and cooking.

About 1,500 hungry students have arrived for the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival.

Proposal pulls cash from local governments

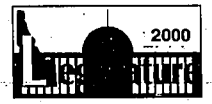

BOISE (AP) – Legislative budget writers struck out on their own Wednesday to shore up the state's public construction account, expand legislative technology and staff, augment educational support for dropouts and undereducated adults and acquire an historic southeastern Idaho building.

The extra cash for state building projects will come out of the pockets of Idaho's cities and counties in what critics warned would hurt the smaller, more rural communities the worst.

They managed to head off an even bigger raid on the local government share of the state Liquor Dispensary profits but could not stop the diversion of $1 million from this year's revenue into the Permanent Building Fund that has been underfinanced for decades.

At the same time, the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee embraced what is essentially a bookkeeping gimmick that frees up for general spending an estimated $2.8 million in lien and business name registration fees collected by the secretary of state.

The maneuvering away from Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's financial blueprint during the second day of 2000-2001 budget deliberations reflected the efforts of the committee's key members to roll up a pool of cash to finance their own priorities since it has become clear the $54 million surplus is destined for tax cuts and other projects.

The one provision the panel did follow Kempthorne's lead on was financing for the next phase of the State Board of Education's statewide academic standards for graduating. State Schools Superintendent Marilyn Howard wanted $1.15 million in the new budget to develop and administer the initial year of a pilot test for reading, writing and mathematics, develop questions for other subjects, train teachers and monitor the program's effectiveness.

Instead, the committee approved Kempthorne's scaled-back $500,000 allocation that would permit so-called exiting standard assessments to be developed for reading, writing and math only. He wants standards for the entire school system before launching headlong into testing.

But even to get to the governor's plan, the committee majority had to first fend off an attempt by Senate Finance Chairman Atwell Parry to terminate financial support for the effort. It failed by just two votes.

Still, the decision to short-circuit Howard's larger request infuriated House Education Chairman Fred Tilman to the point that he momentarily toyed with trying to kill the so-called exiting standards completely. His committee had urged appropriation of the full amount.

The committee did add another $500,000 over Kempthorne's recommendation for Adult Basic Education services, bringing the state's commitment to nearly $1 million for a program that also gets about $1.3 million in federal money.

Advocates believe the infusion will significantly increase those helped by the program, which currently serves only about 11,000 of the estimated 100,000 Idahoans needing help.

And again, Parry questioned the value.

"I don't know whether putting more money into it is going to solve it," he said. "A lot of these people made decisions when they were in school to drop out. How much more taxpayer money should we put into it?"

The raid on the city-county share of the liquor profits was held to just $1 million after it became evident that there was not enough support to require an annual diversion of $1.5 million into the state building fund. The attack mobilized the defenders of local government and members who objected to a major state policy change without so much as a minute of public debate.

"We're talking about taking real dollars away," Republican Sen. Stan Hawkins of Ucon said. "It feels pretty good to spend it up here, but I really think it's the wrong step to take."

Advocates of the raid claimed cities and counties would still be getting more money from liquor profits than in the past – just not as much as they might have.

The final decision will reduce their take this year from $11.5 million to $10.5 million. They shared $8.7 million last year.

Eric Mills of Action for Animals stands outside the Board of Supervisors chambers Tuesday in San Francisco, holding a photo of a calf roping event. Supervisors voted 10-0 in favor of an amended ordinance which requires a vegetarian to be present at all rodeos in San Francisco. Mills favors the original ordinance, which sought a ban of calf roping and steer wrestling.

Lawmakers reject change to alcohol statute

BOISE – The Idaho Senate thumbed its nose at federal intervention on Wednesday, rejecting changes to legislation banning open alcoholic beverage containers in vehicles, even when they are just parked on the shoulder.

In an unrecorded vote, the Senate split 16-16 to kill the amendment intended to accommodate pickup truck and van owners who have no trucks to lock alcoholic beverages in.

The federal government has mandated that the state adopt the restrictions by Oct. 1 or see $2 million of its highway construction money diverted to highway safety and hazard elimination programs.

Legislature in brief

Senate panel kills plan for public vote on tax issue

BOISE – The Senate tax committee on Wednesday rejected a proposal to ask voters this fall if they favor raising the sales tax to finance repair of deteriorating public school buildings.

And the Local Government and Taxation Committee only delayed for two more days the all-but-certain defeat of a proposed constitutional amendment lowering the supermajority for school bond approval from two-thirds to 60 percent for elections held in late May or early November.

Proposal to make DEQ a department moves ahead

BOISE – The Senate State Affairs Committee unanimously endorsed Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's plan to elevate the Division of Environmental Quality to department status.

In fact, Senate President Pro Tem Robert Geddes said on Wednesday that he personally would carry the bill on the Senate floor.

The measure carries out former governor Phil Batt's proposal to officially separate the Division of Environmental Quality from the Department of Health and Welfare. Its actual impact will be negligible since the division has been operating as an essentially independent entity for a number of years.

Move to ban rodeo events in SF fizzles

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – In a city plagued by homelessness, AIDS and skyrocketing rents, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors have taken time to tackle the ever-pressing topic of violent rodeos.

No matter that there have been only two rodeos in the last century held here. The city's esteemed leaders sought to stamp out the insurgence of rodeos once and for all by passing an ordinance banning inhumane events.

When the wrangling was done and the dust settled, the ordinance passed 10-0 Tuesday – although slightly amended.

The slight amendment? Calf roping and steer wrestling will continue – and calf lovers who spent weeks showing oversized photos of allegedly abused livestock around City Hall are fit to be tied.

"The supervisors sold out today. There's not a spine up there," said Eric Mills of Action For Animals, an Oakland-based animal rights group.

Mills said the city supervisors caved in because of strong support for a group of black cowboys who put on the Juneteenth Rodeo last year, the only such event most people here can remember.

"If it hadn't been for the black cowboys, we could have won this. The town is so politically correct and culturally sensitive it would gag a maggot," Mills said.

Wedged between activists and rodeo sponsors in the supervisors' chambers sat two representatives from the Professional Cowboys Rodeo Association, on hand to make sure the attacks didn't spread to, say, South San Francisco.

"I think it's the right decision that has allowed rodeos to continue in San Francisco if they so desire," said Doug Corey, a veterinarian for the association.

Corey says the events are both humane and safe.

In calf roping, the calf is given a head start before a cowboy quickly catches up, throws it on its side and ties three of its legs together with "pigging string." In steer wrestling, the contestant grabs the steer by the horns and twists its neck until the steer falls.

The association supports the black cowboys' event and conducts some 700 rodeo events throughout the United States, with an annual prize purse of $28 million.

In other quizzical city hall developments Tuesday, a discussion on whether to grant landmark status to a 7-foot-high diner sign depicting a dog's head wearing a chef's hat was continued into its sixth week of discussion.

Sides clash in hearing over how to save salmon

BOISE (AP) – Environmental advocates pressed a federal panel Wednesday to act quickly to save endangered salmon runs during the sixth of more than a dozen Northwest hearings on the future of four lower Snake River dams.

"We have not treated Snake River salmon and steelhead very well," said Craig Gehrke of The Wilderness Society. "It's time to take the logical and critical step to bring the lower Snake River back as a river."

Gehrke testified that breaching the dams in Washington was the only way to ensure salmon runs recover from the brink of extinction. Others urged action to prevent the resource-based economies from drying up.

"The little town of Clayton used to pump thousands of gallons of gas a day to fishermen," Mitch Sanchotena of Idaho Steelhead and Salmon Unlimited said. "Today, there is no economy in Clayton. It's a ghost town."

Hearing here

A public hearing on alternatives to restore Idaho's salmon and steelhead runs will be held at 5 p.m. on March 8 at the Weston Plaza, 1350 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. in Twin Falls.

But Republican Gov. Dirk Kempthorne and state legislators cautioned representatives of the federal agencies responsible for conservation of fish and wildlife that breaching the dams may not save the salmon, and is one of several options.

"Breaching the dams is no immediate solution for the fish," Kempthorne said. "Because it's guaranteed to be tied up in the courts and in Congress for at least a decade."

Kempthorne said improving habitat, installing "fish-friendly" hydroelectric turbines and researching ocean conditions should be considered.

And state Senate Minority Leader Clint Stennett said lawmakers do not know enough about potential compensation to endorse breaching.

"Far too little dialogue has taken place on what support measures would be taken," Stennett said. "Breaching would impact cultures and lifestyles, and we don't know how those would be protected."

Earlier, Lt. Gov. Butch Otter, who is running for the Republican nomination in Idaho's 1st Congressional District, rallied in the Capitol Rotunda with other lawmakers who supported the dams.

"Scientists will tell you the only way to save the salmon is to destroy the dams," Otter said. "None of that is true. The science is inconclusive. What we don't know about the salmon is more than we do know."

Both sides converged on Idaho's capital city by the busloads for the sixth of more than a dozen regional federal hearings.

Experts have said that if Congress approves breaching the dams, it would be 2008 before the first one is removed.

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) – Washington Gov. Gary Locke has strengthened his stance against breaching four lower Snake River dams since Oregon's John Kitzhaber became the only Northwest governor to endorse the idea.

"I very strongly disagree with Gov. Kitzhaber," Locke said. "I do not support the breaching of the dams."

Kitzhaber announced his pro-breaching stance Friday. Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne says removing the earthen portions on the dams is not the answer to salmon recovery.

On other occasions, Locke has hedged on his opposition, frustrating some dam supporters. Those include irrigators, barge operators and aluminum companies who rely on the current river system to provide water for crops, river transportation and cheap electricity.

Over the past year, Locke has told Kennewick-area audiences that he "can't conceive of any argument that will lead me to support the breaching of the dams," but would not say he opposed it when asked directly.

That changed Tuesday.

"I think it's fair to say he's strengthened his position," said Ed Penhale, a Locke spokesman. "He's become less convinced there's any other option."

Locke said he remains committed to finding ways to help replenish fish runs.

TWIN FALLS – Size doesn't matter.

The 10-member College of Southern Idaho Equestrian Team says it proved that when the team won high honors in the region in western team competition at the Intercollegiate Horse Show at Oregon State University Jan. 22-23. The team competed against six four-year schools from Washington, Oregon, Montana and Utah. This is only the second year the team has been in existence.

"We have some very good riders on our team," CSI Equestrian Team Coach Curt Fuller says.

Fuller says he has been busy recruiting members for the team and credits the students with promoting the effort.

He says one of the hardest things competitors must learn is riding unfamiliar horses. In each show, competitors are required to draw for the horses they'll ride in the various events. Those events include English equitation, English jumping, western horsemanship and western reining.

Want more information?

For more information on the CSI Equestrian team, call Curt Fuller at 734-8148 or 731-2878 or Eric Hubbard at 735-2433.

CSI was the high point western and reserve high point English team against all competitors both days of the event.

Team member Eric Hubbard of Grace, Idaho won eight individual trophies in all classes of competition, six of those were first place awards.

Other individual awards were won by Dana Vandergessen of Jerome, Emily Hubbard of Grace, Juliette Toone of Eagle, Julie Black of Kimberly, Lindsay Brown of Jerome and Abby Church of Jerome.

Eric Hubbard, Vandergessen and Toone have qualified for individual regional competition set at Brigham Young University in March.

Fuller says the team is also excited about competing against other regions in zone competition in Pomona, Calif. on April 15. Most of the competitors will be riders from larger schools in California.

The department is presenting its second annual spring musical, "Quilters" on March 8-10 and March 16-18 in the Roper Auditorium on the high school campus in Twin Falls.

"Quilters" follows the story of Sarah, a strong woman whose trademark is her beautiful quilts, and her family and acquaintances. She introduces the audience to the hardship and heartache that early pioneers struggled with and how that history is preserved in each quilt.

Each song or scene represents a woman's strength, from dealing with childbirth, to surviving cruel winters. Spiritual and uplifting, "Quilters," is a masterpiece of theatrical empathy and angelic voices, the performers say.

Theater instructor Howard Miller oversaw the production and several students lend their talents to the show's production. Allison Holman, an advanced acting senior, began working with the cast in December with vocal training and coaching. Dane Martens, also an advanced acting senior, choreographed and blocked the musical numbers. The students call it a great accomplishment for them to produce such an advanced level show because many in the ensemble have had no formal vocal or dance lessons.

Ticket information

Advance tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for children, seniors and students with activity cards. At the door, tickets cost $6 for adults and $4 for children, seniors and students with activity cards.

Discounted tickets are available at Kurt's Pharmacy, The Little Red Hen, The Music Exchange and the Magic Valley Arts Council office.

Proceeds from the show will benefit a scholarship fund for seniors pursuing higher education in acting or technical theater.

Local people reach out to aid flood victims

When December's unprecedented torrential rains washed away whole cities in my native country, Venezuela, taking the lives of more than 50,000 people, I went quickly about Twin Falls with a desperate cry for help. I was heartened to find so much concern and generosity.

Randy Hansen and his employees at Randy Hansen Chevrolet Geo were at the forefront of efforts to collect and ship many boxes of supplies to the Venezuelan Consulate in San Francisco. Randy did this entirely at his own expense. Hundreds of people in my country will have become the beneficiaries of his courage and kindness. KTFI, the Impact Radio Group, The Times-News and KMVT all did a great job getting out the message. Many churches, businesses, banks, friends and relatives gave generously. The Red Cross helped our cause, providing information to donors.

I am proud of our community and grateful to all who gave so much.

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

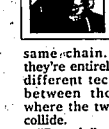

DEAR ABBY: As I climbed the stairs to the front door one day, I got a funny feeling. When I opened the door, I knew that something had happened. I ran to the bedroom closet and jerked the door open. All of my father's shoes were gone, and so was he! No one had said anything to me about his leaving.

At home one parent ignored me, except when I made a mistake. No one listened or spoke to me. During the previous four years, I had lived in my own world, planning my death and funeral, and wishing I was dead. I lived in profound depression. No one noticed. Discovering that my father was gone felt like falling off a cliff after thinking I was on solid ground. As I walked slowly to the kitchen I decided that I'd had enough of everything. After my usual milk and cookies and the San Francisco Chronicle – a new column had appeared a few days earlier (1956). I decided to write to the author of the new column. I haven't the first clue why I chose that person, but at least the columnist would know why I was dead. A few days later, I got another shock. Being the first one home every day, I brought the mail in. I was stunned to see a letter addressed to me. ME! Someone thought I mattered enough to write to me even though I was only 10 years old. It was a long, thoughtful, caring response. The new columnist was you! Over the years I've thought of you often, always with amazement that you wrote to me. It was a very special thing that you did. Thank you.

With appreciation and thanks

DEAR D.L.G.: I'm deeply touched by your letter and pleased that I was there for you when you needed someone.

Could ballerinas be digitigrades?

WHAT'S WHAT
L.M. Boyd

Clarence A. Crane kept trying to get this mint candy machine to work, but it went on punching holes in the centers of the mints. He finally gave up and invented Life Savers.

Cats, dogs and horses are all digitigrades – they walk on their toes without touching their heels to the ground. What, you didn't know that great big horsey walks on its little tippy-toes? Sure does.

What's curious about New Zealand is it's two big islands, north and south, are not of the same chain. Geologists say they're entirely separate, riding different tectonic plates. It's between those two islands where the two tectonic plates collide.

"Beverly" means "Dweller of the Beaver-Meadow." Or used to.

Before World War II, these were the words, all of them, of Japan's national anthem: "May our Emperor live a thousand ages, until the pebbles become a rock overgrown with moss."

The Russian government owes billions of dollars, refuses to pay back billions of dollars and wants to borrow billions of dollars more.

Its reputation has yet to recover from its disastrous 1998 default on about two-thirds of the $150 billion debt it owes foreign lenders. Yet Russia desperately needs help from just those lenders: It still has massive debts and argues it doesn't have enough money to pay them.

Over the last several months, the government has tried to persuade lenders to write off its old debts. At the same time, it wants to restore the credibility it needs to regain access to foreign capital markets – and get more loans.

So far, Russia's formula seems to be working.

On Feb. 11, the London Club – a group of banks and commercial creditors – agreed to scrub about a third of the $31.8 billion in Soviet-era debt Russia owes. The group gave Moscow a seven-year break before it must resume payments on the rest, which will be converted into long-term Eurobonds.

It was a good deal for the London Club because the loans had become all but worthless. Although Russia had formally taken responsibility for paying the Soviet Union's debts, there have been no legal means to force it to do so.

The deal is good for Russia, too, easing the debt burden and demonstrating that the country is beginning to recover the trust of its creditors.

But it brings risks for both sides. There is no guarantee that in seven years Russia will have the money to start paying off the remaining debt as promised.

"There's still an awful lot of uncertainty about Russia's ability and willingness to pay. They have to continue building up credibility," said Roland Nash, chief economist at Renaissance Capital, an investment bank in Moscow. "History would suggest a degree of caution about whether they will be able to get there."

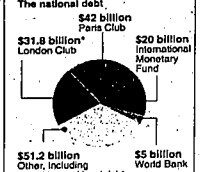

How Russia prepares for those payments will be crucial. Will it maintain the conservative fiscal course it has charted in recent months and reduce its reliance on lending? Or will it return to its old ways?

So far, the Russians are saying the right things. Acting President Vladimir Putin has not outlined a detailed policy on debt repayment, but he hailed the London Club agreement on Feb. 13, two days after it was announced.

What Russia owes

Russia, despite its overall debt of $150 billion, is struggling to pay back its creditors and seeks to borrow billions more.

Serbs have their car searched for weapons by French soldiers in the northern part of Kosovska Mitrovica Wednesday in Kosovo. The ethnically divided town was relatively quiet Wednesday following weeks of tension and violence which have left at least nine people dead.

Americans seize weapons in Kosovo in a surprise

KOSOVSKA MITROVICA, Yugoslavia (AP) – U.S. paratroopers swooped down on the Serb part of a divided Kosovo city at dawn Wednesday, arresting eight people and seizing weapons in a surprise raid only three days after Serbs drove them away in a hail of stones.

As a further sign of NATO resolve to maintain control, peacekeepers announced plans to start moving ethnic Albanians back to their homes in the Serb-controlled part of Kosovska Mitrovica north of the Ibar River. The peacekeepers also said demonstrations would be banned in a wide area encompassing both Serb and ethnic Albanian-dominated neighborhoods. But Serb leaders objected to the resettlement plan.

One of them, Oliver Ivanovic, warned that the crisis in Kosovo's most multiethnic city would "peak within 10 to 15 days" unless the NATO-led Kosovo Force abandons its plan. Tensions have been rising here since a grenade attack on a U.N. bus Feb. 2 killed two elderly Serbs south of the city, that triggered revenge attacks that have left nine people dead and scores injured.

As French troops surrounded the search area, about 300 troops of the U.S. 504th Airborne Infantry – backed by armored vehicles and in full battle gear – crossed the Ibar River at dawn and swept through "Little Bosnia," an ethnically mixed neighborhood, searching house-to-house for weapons.

Spain marches in protest of Basque bomb

VITORIA, Spain (AP) – Thousands of Spaniards nationwide observed five minutes of silence Wednesday to protest the latest deadly car bombing blamed on the Basque separatist group ETA.

In Vitoria, the Basque capital where a Socialist politician and his bodyguard were killed by the blast Tuesday, several thousand huddled under umbrellas in Spain Square as a steady rain fell.

Their solemn protest was mirrored all over Spain as people gathered outside town halls in silent condemnation of ETA, state radio said. The explosion occurred Tuesday just 200 yards from the headquarters of the president of the Basque government.

U.N. blue berets keep Dili peace

DILI, East Timor (AP) – Wrecked and burned out, but peaceful at last, East Timor moved a little closer to nationhood Wednesday when Australian-led peacekeepers withdrew five months after ending a wave of pro-Indonesian militia violence. The departure of the International Force in East Timor, called Interfet, leaves a U.N. force of blue berets in control of the half-island territory, which remains several years away from independence.

U.N. administrators temporarily governing East Timor said the new force would maintain peace so that desperately needed reconstruction could proceed. Tens of thousands of East Timorese continue to live in tents or makeshift huts. Few services are in place. Unemployment is high, and the people are poor and aid-dependent.

Forces surround Chechen rebels

MESKER-YURT, Russia (AP) – Rebels dug in around the last major Chechen command post fiercely battled federal troops trying to surround them, downing a Russian helicopter and damaging three others, the military said Wednesday.

Nevertheless, Russian forces managed to close the circle around 2,700 militants concentrated in the mountainous southern region of Shatoi, said Col. Gen. Gennady Troshev, the deputy military commander in Chechnya.

"Only one district, Shatoi, is left. The remnants of bandit groups there ... are today blocked by our forces," Troshev said. "I think in the nearest future we'll be able to close the book on what we're doing here."

Shatoi is 30 miles south of the Chechen capital, Grozny, inside the Argun Gorge.

The steep mountain passage has been the site of the heaviest fighting in recent days as federal troops have pressed from several sides to encircle the thousands of rebels there.

Video helps parents get baby on trail

The fact that a new hiking guide is a video, not a book, is one hint that author Marietta Gilman knows firsthand about motherhood.

Realizing that new parents have little time to read, she decided to create a 30-minute video to teach new parents how to hike with their babies.

Gilman, of San Rafael, Calif., knows her way around the great outdoors. She's a two-time whitewater world champion and has worked as a commercial raft guide, personal trainer and sea-kayak guide. She also was a stunt double for Kate Capshaw in the movie "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom" and has been a member of a Nordic search-and-rescue team and a wilderness trip leader.

So when her daughter, Sydney, was born two and a half years ago, it seemed natural to take her baby with her when she did what she loved most.

BEND IN THE RIVER
Deb Acord

"I was so anxious to get out of the house and exercise, but I didn't want to leave Sydney with a baby sitter while I went out."

When hiking with baby

- ☐ Wear boots for trail hiking. For stroller hiking, good sneakers will work.
- ☐ In summer, dress baby in loose-fitting cottons for air circulation and a tight weave to block the sun. Be sure to cover hands and feet.
- ☐ For off-season outings, keep a range of clothing for you and your baby in your car so you are ready for whatever conditions exist at the trailhead.
- ☐ Remember socks – yours and baby's – make great hand- and foot-warmers for the baby.
- ☐ Check your baby's temperature by feeling the back of the neck or tummy. Cool hands and feet are OK.
- ☐ If your baby isn't completely used to the backpack, carry a front pack with you so you can change off if you need to.
- ☐ Never leave baby unattended in the carrier.
- ☐ Learn CPR and basic first-aid.
- ☐ Always hike with another adult and let someone know where you're going and when you'll be home.

Source: Marietta Gilman, "Hiking With Baby."

So she ventured out on her favorite trails and was surprised at what she saw. Other new parents with their babies were either ill-prepared or unsure of their ability to hike with kids.

"Nobody knew what to bring, what shoes to wear, or how to dress their baby, and they all reported there were no resources available to offer suggestions" she says.

That day, the idea for her video, "Hiking With Baby," was born. More than 30 moms and dads and their babies are in the video, which features their own experiences on the trail. Other segments address breastfeeding on the trail and new parents' common fears of hiking with babies.

"I think most new parents just don't have much confidence that they'll do the right thing," Gilman says. "They feel like nobody else is out there on the trail with their baby. There are some who will have a baby and go out and continue their lives, but many others change their lives completely, and stay in the house for four years."

Gilman's goal "was to show parents that it's OK. And that hiking, as opposed to skiing or biking, is easy and can be done anywhere and with little extra equipment and expense."

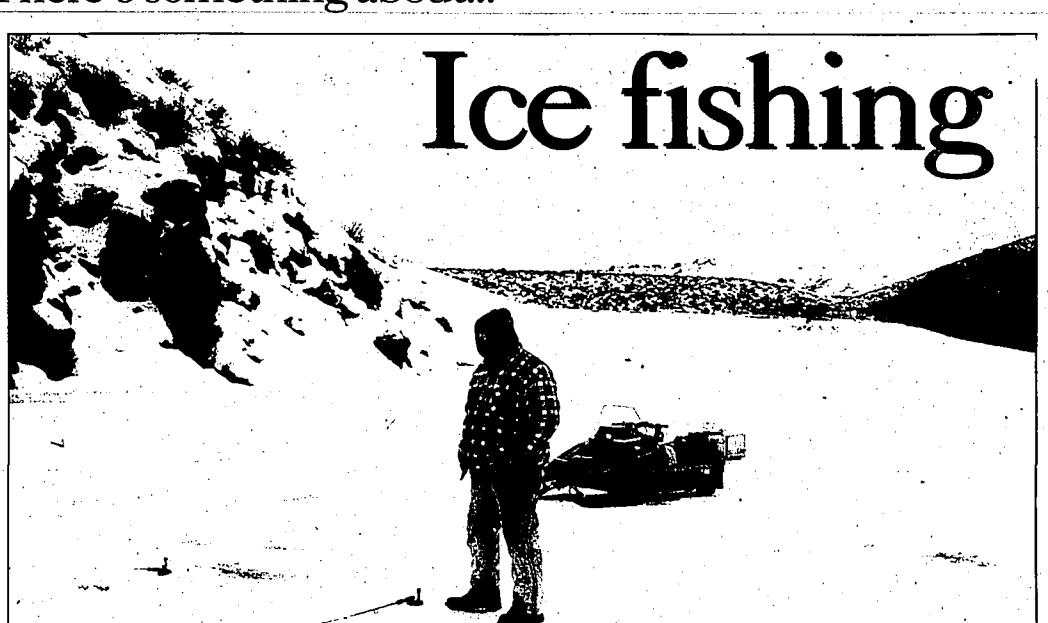

The most common mistake new parents make when heading out to the trail is neglecting their own gear in the interest of getting their baby adequately prepared. "I tell people that it's just like when you're on an airplane. Once those air masks come down out of the ceiling, you take care of yourself first, then your baby. Your baby can't take care of you if you're in trouble on the trail," she says.

"Hiking with Baby" comes with an equipment checklist and 10 tips for safe hiking with infants. The video, available in early March, is $12.95 (plus shipping and handling) and can be ordered at (800) 968-2261.

There's something about...

Ice fishing

STU MURRELL/The Times-News

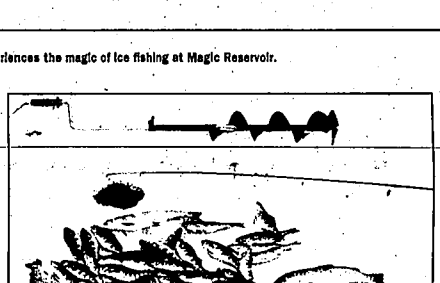

Bellevue resident Bill Dugger experiences the magic of ice fishing at Magic Reservoir.

By Stu Murrell
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE – Ice fishermen have been doing well on Magic and Fish Creek reservoirs in recent weeks and that should continue unless a warm spell reduces the ice cover. Anglers can fish Magic Reservoir from the dam, West Side Resort or at the upper end near Warm Springs Landing. Those wishing to fish in open water can try their luck below the dam.

Idaho law allows a sportsman to use up to five rods while fishing through the ice. Some anglers use special tip-up rods, but any spinning outfit will suffice. A light tip on the rod helps to detect slight nibbles when fishing in cold water.

Worms, power bait, corn and salmon eggs are all favorite baits for this sport. Some fishermen also use small jigs or lures to attract fish. To increase your chances, lower your bait or lure to the bottom, then raise it a foot or so and move it up and down.

STU MURRELL/The Times-News

There is often confusion as to where a reservoir (which has a year-round season and general limits) ends and its tributaries (which may have a special season or open on May 27) begin.

If feeder streams are running, then they are not considered part of the reservoir, said Gary Hompland, Jerome-based game warden with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. This applies particularly to the Big Wood River entering Magic Reservoir and the stream feeding Roseworth Reservoir. Fishermen are limited to one pole or a second one with a two-pole validation when fishing in open or moving water.

If you're new to ice fishing, you will need some special equipment. An ice auger is first on the list – either hand or motor powered. Never pound the auger against the ice. One reason is that it could weaken the ice. Another is that bending the blade will cause it to lose its bite in the ice, thus resulting in angler frustration.

Safety is crucial when ice fishing. There is ample ice on Magic and Fish Creek reservoirs right now. However, rotten spots will develop as the weather warms. Safe ice on Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir and Roseworth is a doubtful proposition during warm winters. Little Wood Reservoir often has open water around its margins as it fills at this time of year.

Fishing with a buddy is not only nice for the social aspect, but it is a good safety precaution. A stout rope at least 100 feet long and a pole (the ice auger may suffice) are useful items when a rescue is needed. A sled to haul equipment is handy and moves easily across the ice.

If an area looks questionable, the pole or handle of the ice auger can be used to test it before walking on it. Partners should be separated as they walk so if one gets into trouble, the other can help.

Clothing should be in layers as cutting a hole in the ice can be warm work. If a wind arises or the temperature drops, ice fishing can be a mighty cold sport. Warm drinks are always nice to keep up the body temperature and a good pair of rubber bottomed boots are useful in wet conditions.

Wilderness academy helps to build self-esteem

The Associated Press

FRENCH GULCH, Calif. – Sixteen-year-old Jake Mills had made a habit out of skipping school in his hometown of Danville.

But when his parents sent him to NAWA, a wilderness-based boarding school in French Gulch, he quickly realized his days as a truant were over.

"When I got here, it was like, where am I gonna go?" Mills said of the remote, 556-acre campus at the foot of the Trinity Alps.

Imagine his surprise when he discovered that, for the first time, he didn't want to escape from school.

"I'm a lot happier now, a lot more outgoing," said Mills, who has been at NAWA for four months. "I've kind of started over."

Mills is among about 30 students from all over California who study, live and play at the school. And "bored" isn't an adjective you're likely to hear there.

When students aren't in class, they're scaling rocks, rappelling down cliffs or crawling through caves. It's all part of a plan to infuse self-confidence and motivation into teens who have been frustrated by the traditional educational system.

Though a few come to NAWA with high grades, most haven't done well academically in the past, said Jason Hull, NAWA's director of admissions and marketing.

"If your son hasn't made it in public school since kindergarten and he's in 10th grade, he's probably not going to succeed in the 11th," said Hull, who also directs NAWA's wilderness and rescue safety programs and is a training officer for Shasta County Search and Rescue.

Each class has four to 11 students apiece, which is ideal for teens who have spent years hiding in the back of a classroom, Hull said. After the school day ends at 4:30 p.m., students have dinner together and participate in activities that range from playing pool to fly-fishing before retiring to their dorms. Lights go out at 10 p.m.

The campus' philosophy follows the proverb, "I heard and I forgot. I saw and I remembered. I did and I understood."

The boarding school actually has three academic programs – the California Academy, which is in French Gulch; Academy USA, which features 16-day educational trips all over the world; and Snowboard USA near Lake Tahoe, where students train for snowboarding competitions while attending school. The students are registered with the U.S. Amateur Snowboarding Association.

Hull's parents, Dave and Celia, had bought the camp when they were living in Whittier and started Pine Meadows School for severely emotionally disturbed youth there in 1980. From 1988 to 1992, NAWA was a summer school. In fall 1992, the traveling program was founded and it took eight kids in a van all over the country, Hull said.

They closed Pine Meadows in June 1994 and opened the California Academy that fall. Snowboard USA opened the following fall in Mount Shasta (it moved to Tahoe two years later).

NAWA also has an "Adventure Summer School," which blends academics and outdoor activities.

Academy USA costs $21,980 per school year, and the other two programs are an additional $3,000. Some $80,000 in financial aid is distributed every year, and a typical financial aid package covers 25 percent of the school's cost. NAWA is accredited through the Western Association of Schools and Colleges.

The curriculum is based on state standards and the academy also offers vocational education, including landscaping, culinary arts, wood shop and firefighting.

And students learn a variety of outdoor skills, including back-

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) – Alaska musher Aliy Zirkle has become the first woman to win the Yukon Quest International Sled Dog Race.

The 30-year-old musher from Two Rivers crossed the finish line in Takhini Hot Springs, Yukon at 10:59 a.m. PST Wednesday behind a team of nine dogs. She finished the 1,000-mile race in 10 days, 22 hours and 7 minutes.

Her victory comes 15 years after Libby Riddles became the first woman to win Alaska's more famous mushing event, the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race.

She takes home $30,000 for the victory. The total purse is $125,000, with prize money paid to the first 15 finishers.

Zirkle dominated much of the second half of the race across some of the most sparsely populated land in North America. She told reporters at the finish line that she felt confident that she would win when she reached the Dawson City checkpoint, about 450 miles back, but kept racing.

"I didn't really want to be too big-headed," said an exhausted Zirkle. She had left the final checkpoint, Braeburn Lodge, shortly after 2 a.m. and ran the final 80-mile leg of the race through the night as the temperature dipped to about 10 degrees below zero.

"I had a plan going into the whole thing," Zirkle said. "We stuck to that plan and that put me an hour or so ahead of everyone else."

Thomas Tetz of Tagish, Yukon had been as much as two hours behind Zirkle as the race wound down, but he managed to narrow the gap. He finished a half-hour behind Zirkle to claim a check for $24,000.

The race from Fairbanks normally ends in Whitehorse, but unusually warm temperatures forced race organizers to shorten the race by about 25 miles, due to open water on the Yukon River trail near Whitehorse.

Three other mushers – Frank Turner of Whitehorse, Peter Butteri of Tok and Jack Berry of Homer – all left the Braeburn checkpoint at about 6 a.m. Alaska time, each with eight dogs.

Twenty-nine mushers started the race in Fairbanks on Feb. 12. Seven of them had scratched as of early Wednesday.

AP photo

Aliy Zirkle, of Two River, Alaska, became the first women to win the Yukon Quest International Sled Dog Race Wednesday, finishing a half-hour ahead of her nearest competitor.

Zirkle, who grew up in New Hampshire and Puerto Rico, moved to Alaska in 1992 after getting a biology degree at the University of Pennsylvania.

She moved to the tiny village of Bettles, north of the Arctic Circle, and quickly adopted a Bush lifestyle, working as a biologist and trapper.

She collected an assortment of dogs from villagers and learned the subtleties of mushing before entering her first Quest in 1998, finishing in 17th place. She moved up to fourth place last year.

Zirkle and fellow Quest musher Jerry Loudon operate a kennel together in Two Rivers, a wooded area outside Fairbanks populated by mushers and laced mushing trails.

Thomas Tetz of Tagish, Yukon Territory, makes his way along the Yukon River Tuesday during the Yukon Quest International Sled Dog Race. He finished in second place.

Hunting fatalities worst since 1982

BOISE (AP) – The state's 1999-2000 hunting season ended with the highest number of human fatalities since 1982.

Five people died in hunting-related shooting accidents. Four non-fatal shootings also were reported.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game said that, compared to recent statistics, the number of incidents is no higher than the average. But, officials said, the outcomes were more grim.

Of the five fatalities, three involved victims mistaken for game, one was the victim of careless firearm handling and the last was caused by a firearm falling from an insecure rest.

The non-fatal accidents involved two cases of firearms discharging while riding in a vehicle and the other was alcohol-related.

Fish and Game officials say that since the inception of Idaho's hunter education program in 1980, hunting seasons have averaged 1.9 fatalities and 5.8 non-fatal shootings.

The figures for the last decade suggest that the 1999-2000 statistics are an anomaly. There were no hunting-related fatalities in 1993, 1995, 1996 or 1998.

packing, rock climbing (the school has a climbing wall), caving, skiing, mountaineering, kayaking, rappelling, snowboarding and mountain biking. All students take courses in vertical rescue and swift-water rescue. Students spend one day each weekend doing community service or going on an outdoor excursion.

Wilderness activities heighten teens' self-confidence, motivation, leadership skills and study habits, Hull said.

Students agreed.

"These little things can do so much for your self-esteem – like, 'Wow, I just climbed that rock,'" said sophomore Heather Hall, 16, of Mill Valley.

Added Mills, "It's a lot of stuff I wouldn't go out and do on my own."

And students said they have the utmost faith in their instructors.

"There's no dude I'd feel safer on a rock with than this dude," Mills said of Nieman Van Hooser, a wilderness instructor and mountain bike trip leader who led a recent rock-climbing trip.

'Whoopers' continue to recover after nearly going extinct

Chicago Tribune

A century ago, whooping cranes were in a headlong dive toward extinction, and the big birds, white as new snow, were already ghosts in Illinois.

"Only a very few have been shot here," grimly noted the 1892 book "Birds of Peoria and Tazewell Counties, Illinois."

A vote last month by an obscure commission in Florida could lead to a wild, migrating flock of "whoopers" returning to Illinois and other Midwestern states, improving the odds that the magnificent, though nervous, 5-foot-tall bird can beat its brush with oblivion.

As early as 2001, scientists hope to use a squadron of four ultralight airplanes to lead young whoopers – fooled into thinking the planes are their parents – along a man-made migration route from Wisconsin through Illinois to Florida to establish a new flock.

"Unlike many birds, young cranes learn to migrate from their parents, but there aren't any parents to teach them," said Jim Harris, deputy director of the International Crane Foundation in Baraboo, Wis., a non-profit group participating in the effort.

The Florida Conservation Commission tentatively agreed Friday to accommodate a wintering flock of whooping cranes at Chassahowitzka National Wildlife Refuge's sprawling, protected salt marsh near Tampa, allowing the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to proceed with a plan to establish a new population of the cranes.

Scientists fear that having just one wild, migrating population leaves the birds vulnerable to a catastrophic event that could halve the population and nudge the birds back toward extinction.

"If something happens to the wild population that winters in Texas, then we have nothing to fall back on," said Tom Stehn, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's program manager for the whooping crane.

Political forces, as much as biological ones, doomed that project when Western states became rankled by the hunting and land-use restrictions that could accompany one of the most endangered creatures on Earth.

A non-migratory population now totaling 64 cranes has been established at Kissimmee Prairie in Florida. More than 100 others live at three breeding centers, including 30 whoopers at the crane foundation.

Because of the political problems in the West, the U.S. government is being careful in the East.

Starting this week, federal officials plan to formally approach conservation scientists in Illinois and other states along the migration route seeking support for establishing the new flock in the Midwest and Southeast.

Scientists are already enthusiastic about the prospect of the birds returning to Illinois airspace, if not the ground, on the flight to and from Wisconsin.

"As far as anyone has seen, whoopers do not like to fly over large bodies of water, so everybody is anticipating that they would fly around the bottom of the lake," said Glen Kruse, endangered species program manager with the Illinois Department of Natural Resources.

"We keep our fingers crossed that they might at least drop in to feed, maybe even look for some nesting someday."

The whooping crane was probably never a common bird. By some estimates, there were about 5,000 whoopers in North America at the outset of the 19th century.

But scientists were able to learn enough about the birds to help protect them, and the species has been increasing its population for more than 50 years.

All the birds that remain, and every whooping crane in the future, will be descendants of those last birds. The whooping cranes are all so closely related that it lowers their chances of breeding successfully.

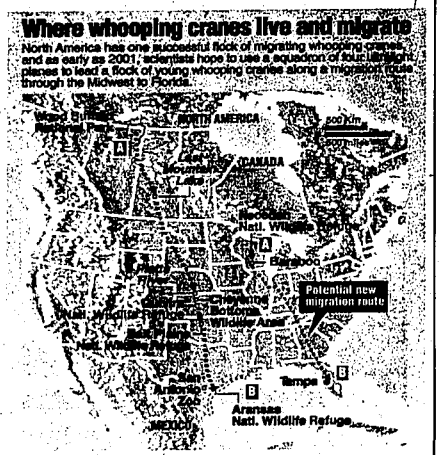

"We believe there is enough genetic material left, but the reduced genetics is a threat to the species," Stehn said.

Now, all the birds in captivity are mated exclusively through artificial insemination, and captive birds' eggs all spend time in an incubator to improve their chances of hatching.

The birds themselves are nervous and mistrustful. Nobody knows if they have always been that way, or if the traits were exaggerated by interbreeding.

The birds are still so rare and precious that the attempt to reintroduce them will first be tried on the common sandhill crane.

If all the states between Wisconsin and Florida sign on, a group of sandhill chicks will be taught this summer how to follow an ultralight plane. Without natural parents around, the birds will imprint on the plane and pilot and follow the contraption like ducklings behind their mom.

Board mulls opening Utah park to hunting

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – The state Parks and Recreation Board has agreed to hold public hearings on whether big-game hunting should be allowed at Antelope Island State Park.

The mule-deer hunt could raise thousands of dollars for the park by selling permits to the highest bidders. Opponents contend allowing hunting at Antelope Island may run counter to its image as a place to watch – not shoot – wildlife.

"Frankly, this sounds to me like we're re-establishing a royal hunting grounds," board member Lucille Tuttle said. "The nature of this park has been as a wildlife preserve. If it's just for the money, I don't know if we can justify it."

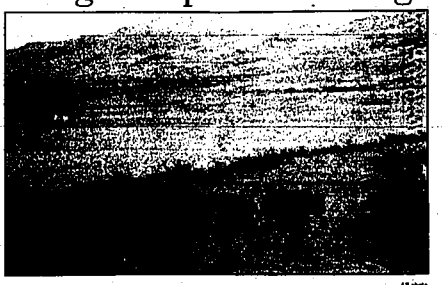

In 11 years as a state park, only a handful of buffalo hunting permits have been issued for the 15.5-mile-long Great Salt Lake island. Those permits are issued to keep the herd at an ideal level.

The park's growing mule deer herd, estimated at 210 head, is enticing to hunters. Many of the bucks have trophy-size antlers.

"We absolutely do not want 10,000 people dressed in hunter orange roaming over Antelope Island," said hunt proponent Don Peay of the Sportsmen for Fish and Wildlife. "But we believe if two permits were issued, one of those could be auctioned and would bring anywhere from $100,000 to $130,000, while the other permit would be put into a public drawing for a super quality, limited hunt available to the average Utahn."

Parks board member Bruce King said he did not have a problem with the park earning needed funds by allowing hunters to shoot just two mule deer annually out of a herd of 200.

"They are just dying of old age out there right now," King said. "We're allowing coyotes to basically decimate the fawns and we don't have a problem with that, but we have a problem with shooting a couple of older bucks? What's wrong with making a little bit of money on Antelope Island?"

Adult bison and their calves cross a road to another pasture on Antelope Island northwest of Salt Lake City.

Board Chairman Jeff Packer said the amount raised would not dent the $90 million needed to fix dilapidated park facilities. And many members said fund raising should not be the determining factor in the decision.

"We live in an economic world, but I'm a little uncomfortable about putting all the emphasis on the financial issue," said board member Norman Nielson.

Owner expects building will be leased soon

TWIN FALLS – Since the closure of The Sandpiper restaurant six months ago, the Blue Lakes Boulevard North building has stood vacant.

But that may change as soon as next week.

Several interested parties have been looking at the space to lease, including a few restaurants, said the property's owner, Joe Russell.

Russell had an offer from a steak-house chain that didn't pan out; currently another established restaurant is looking to sign a lease, he said.

Although there have been several offers made to purchase the property, Russell has declined.

"I feel like it's a great location," he said. "I feel very confident that it is going to lease."

Kimberly will soon have a second gas station

KIMBERLY – Motorists in the Kimberly area will have the option of a second gas station within the next few days.

Scott Thomas of Twin Falls will open a Phillips 66 station on the corner of Kimberly's Main and Center streets. That location has been closed since the Chevron station shut down last year.

Thomas will offer three grades of gas along with on-road and off-road diesel fuel. His will be the first station to offer diesel in Kimberly for a long time. There will be an all-night pump for credit-card users.

The convenience store will carry a standard line of merchandise and will feature a kitchen offering such favorites as chicken wings and French fries or a simple hot dog.

The Fast-Way station will be open from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. during winter.

Thomas has been in the petroleum equipment business serving the Idaho-Nevada area and said he is looking forward to doing business in one place.

Wells Fargo authorizes repurchase of shares

SAN FRANCISCO – Wells Fargo & Co.'s board this week authorized it to acquire, from time to time, up to 81 million shares of the company's issued and outstanding common stock.

That is about 5 percent of the company's 1.6 billion shares of outstanding common stock.

Sept. 28, Wells Fargo – which has bank branches in the Magic Valley – announced a share repurchase of up to 82 million shares.

These shares, to be purchased at market price, are part of Wells Fargo's systematic pattern of common stock repurchases to meet the stock issuance requirements of its benefit plans and other stock issuance requirements, including acquisitions accounted for as purchases.

National union reps reach railroad pact

POCATELLO – National union representatives have reached an agreement with major railroads that may stem the tide of rail jobs leaving this town.

Union Pacific Railroad and other major carriers agreed last week to end the legal practice of cramdown, which enabled merged railroads to override, modify or cancel existing collective bargaining agreements.

United Transportation Union Idaho Legislative Director Dale Wheeler said Tuesday the agreement likely will stop the flow of hundreds of railroad jobs that have left Pocatello in recent years.

"With the cram-down law in place, railroads can go in and move people around and close shops," said Wheeler. "That's why some of those jobs in Pocatello have been lost."

The agreement was reached with United Transportation Union officials but will affect all union crafts on all railroads, said Jim Lance, local chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

"It definitely saved jobs from being moved out of Pocatello," Lance said. "It protects jobs and provides a level playing field. That's all we've wanted all along."

The action came in response to a bill sponsored by Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, that sought to take away merged railroads' rights to disregard labor agreements.

Erin Andrews prepares seed samples for genetic testing in the electrophoresis lab of Seminis Vegetable Seed Co. in one of the company's Magic Valley facilities in this November 1998 photo. Seminis said this week it will move much of its operation out of the Magic Valley, but research and seed growing will remain.

Seminis details layoff plans, says cutbacks won't affect growers

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

FILER – The 128 independent vegetable-seed growers in the Magic Valley actively contracting with Seminis Inc. will see no decrease in their contracts nor other changes as a result of the company's reorganization, a Seminis spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Seminis will produce pea, bean, onion, and carrot seed with contract growers on about 4,900 acres in the Magic Valley this year, said Jodi Smith, manager of corporate communications for the Saticoy, Calif.-based seed developer, producer and marketer.

This week's news wasn't so good for employees at Seminis facilities in Filer and the outskirts of Twin Falls near Filer.

The processing facility in Filer – which cleans, sizes, treats with protective chemicals, packs and ships seed to food processors and growers – employs 37 workers. All of those operations will be transferred beginning in spring 2001 to Warden, Wash., where Seminis is expanding a plant to take over Filer's seed-processing facility, Smith said.

Of the 37 employees in Filer, about 13 people will relocate within the company, and 24 will be laid off in spring 2001, she said. Seminis wanted to give the workers and their families as much time as possible to plan for the future, she added.

The Seminis quality assurance laboratory in Twin Falls – a germination lab and a genetics quality testing lab – will be closed this summer, and those operations will move to a new plant Seminis is constructing in Oxnard, Calif., Smith said.

Of Twin Falls' 35 quality assurance employees, seven were offered relocations to Oxnard, and 28 will be laid off this summer, she said.

"We're estimating late summer," said Jay Hulbert, vice president general manager of operations for Seminis. He couldn't specify a month for the quality-assurance layoffs; the schedule is dependent on the Oxnard plant's readiness.

Hulbert declined to give salary information for the positions the Magic Valley will lose. But he said those to be laid off in Twin Falls are laboratory technicians, with usually a year's training or more, and those in Filer are clerical or warehouse employees.

Attrition may empty some of the positions if anyone leaves the facilities, Seminis won't fill that job, Hulbert said.

In Twin Falls, Seminis also has a research center, which works on bean and pea breeding and plant pathology and won't be affected by the reorganization. The 13 researchers and support workers will continue to work in Twin Falls, Smith said. Those 13 are not included among the 35 other Twin Falls employees.

Seed growers, too, got good news.

Seminis sent letters to growers assuring them it will continue to produce seed in southern Idaho, Hulbert said. In fact, the company is preparing now for planting, getting stock seed ready to ship to growers.

Seminis grows a small amount of seed itself at the Twin Falls research station, he said, but all large-scale production is contracted.

The company's Magic Valley seed production – mostly beans and peas for the canned- and frozen-food industry – will be "down a little bit this year," but that's because last year's good yield raised supplies. This season is "the down cycle," Hulbert said.

With the reorganization, local seed will be shipped to Warden instead of Filer for processing. Some of Seminis' seed is sold to food-crop growers, and some to food processors who supply the seed to their own food growers,

Would-be developer hasn't yet completed application for Urban Renewal project

By Rachel Denny
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – Since the Urban Renewal Agency more than a month ago accepted the proposal by Bob Seastrom – a local manufacturer of precision parts – to build a climbing gym and retail complex in Old Towne, the agency has yet to receive a completed application from Seastrom.

> 'To the best of my knowledge Bob (Seastrom) is continuing to work on it.'
> – Dave McAlindin, Urban Renewal Agency

And the would-be developer isn't talking about the project.

Carl Johnson, Seastrom Manufacturing Co.'s human relations manager, on Wednesday said Seastrom declined comment on all aspects of the proposal.

In December, Urban Renewal advertised for development proposals for a climbing gym and retail center at the site where an old blue granary once sat on Shoshone Street.

The proposal asked for a developer who would be able to complete the project within 18 months of approval by the agency, put in at least $500,000 of capital improvements and retain historical integrity of the site's remaining silos.

"A group of individuals, in which I am part, are interested in pursuing this project and feel we can meet the guidelines given," Seastrom wrote in a letter to Urban Renewal.

"One of our main concerns is to preserve the silos as a landmark for Old Towne and Twin Falls," he wrote. "We also feel we can create a unique experience which will give the people of Twin Falls something few places in the world have, as well as creating a reason for people from other communities to come to Twin Falls."

Currently, Seastrom has an Urban Renewal application form and presumably is working on a detailed proposal, Urban Renewal Agency director Dave McAlindin said.

"To the best of my knowledge Bob (Seastrom) is continuing to work on it," he said. "I haven't spoken to Bob (about the proposal) for three weeks."

MGM Grand offers to purchase Mirage Resorts for $3.5 billion

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS – MGM Grand Inc. announced Wednesday it was offering $3.5 billion in cash and stock for rival Mirage Resorts Inc., setting up a possible battle between two titans of the casino industry.

The entertainment, hotel and gaming company said it made the offer of $17 a share for Mirage stock in a letter to Steve Wynn, chief executive and chairman of Mirage Resorts. The unexpected offer is more than 56 percent higher than Mirage's closing share price of $10.87.5 Tuesday.

The deal also includes MGM's assumption of about $2 billion in Mirage debt.

In early-afternoon trading Wednesday on the New York Stock Exchange, Mirage shares jumped 30.5 percent, or $3.31.25 a share, to $14.18.75 a share while MGM Grand shares were down 25 cents at $40.12.5 a share.

In a one-sentence statement, Mirage said the offer was unsolicited and would be considered by the company's board of directors "in the near future."

The MGM Grand Hotel and Casino, seen Wednesday, has made an unsolicited offer to buy Mirage Resorts, Inc. for $3.5 billion in cash and stock.

MGM's major stockholder is billionaire Kirk Kerkorian. He and Wynn – described in the past as friends – have played a major role in shaping Las Vegas as the world's gambling capital and the fastest-growing city in America.

The boom in Las Vegas dates back to Wynn's opening of the company's flagship Mirage hotel-casino in 1989. The company also owns the 3,025-room Bellagio hotel-casino, the biggest earning hotel on the Las Vegas Strip and famous for its $300 million collection of rare paintings.

Kerkorian has been a major player in Las Vegas for more than a quarter of a century. He has built the world's largest hotel here three times: first the International, now the Las Vegas Hilton; the old MGM Grand, now Bally's-Las Vegas; and then, in 1993, the new MGM Grand.

Mirage has struggled with its Beau Rivage resort that opened last March in Mississippi, and its fourth quarter 1999 earnings disappointed some analysts. But MGM Grand's earnings have been rising, and there have been rumors for several weeks that it was in a buying mood.

MGM Grand chairman J. Terrence Lanni said in the letter the combined company "would be the undisputed leader in our industry by any measure."

Micron plans to open portion of Utah plant

The Times-News
and The Associated Press

BOISE – Micron Technology Inc. is opening a piece of its long-awaited plant in Lehi, Utah.

The Boise-based memory chip company is moving part of its testing operations to the Lehi facility, a $2.5 billion project that has been on hold for nearly two years.

"It made sense to move some test activity to Lehi. In Boise, we are crowded," spokesman Grant Jones said. "As we diversify our memory technology, we need that additional space here in Boise."

The Utah plant is one that some in Twin Falls had labored to attract – and others had fought to keep away.

In the mid-1990s, business recruiters from the Magic Valley made a regional effort to attract Micron's offer of 3,500 jobs and a $1.3 billion computer-chip plant. But Micron announced in February 1995 the company would expand near Lehi instead.

During the past year, the company has added new types of memory chips that need separate fabrication space in the company's production facilities. Micron will move several hundred workers to the Lehi plant this spring and finish the transfer by February 2001, Jones said.

Between 150 and 200 Micron employees now work at the Lehi plant, mainly in maintenance.

Workers in the Boise testing operations will be given the option of moving. The rest of the jobs will be filled in Utah, he said, adding that no layoffs are expected.

Workers who are in the affected testing operations but do not want to move will be relocated within the company in Boise, Jones said.

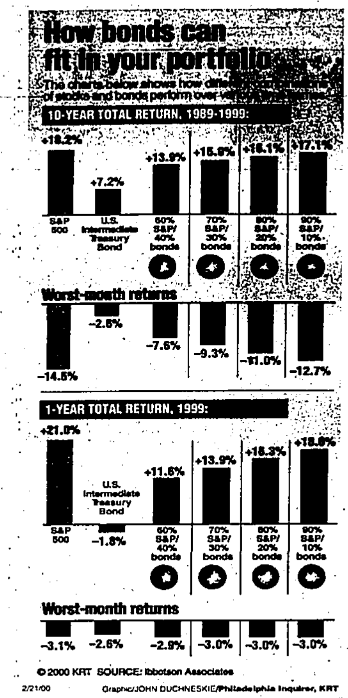

"From a business standpoint, it makes sense. It will result in a more efficient operation," Jones said.

Micron Technology began building the Lehi plant in 1995 after the hotly debated site-selection process.

Memory chip prices were at an all-time high at that point in 1995, but in 1996, the memory chip market began a three-year decline that eventually crippled companies around the world. Micron Technology survived, but halted work at the Lehi plant in spring 1998.

Bonds protect against falling stock prices

They still deserve a place in portfolios

By Miriam Hill
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Your bond investment, the one you bought to protect yourself, has been losing money. Or, if you're lucky, your bonds are breaking even, but you still would have been better off in a money-market account.

What's going on? Why do bond investors feel as if the shelter they bought keeps crashing in on them instead?

Rising interest rates, which push down bond prices, are the culprit. Trying to keep a strong economy in check, the Federal Reserve has raised interest rates four times in the last year, punishing bond investors. In the topsy-turvy bond world, rising rates are bad because investors clamor for the new bonds that pay higher rates, depressing the prices of the old bonds.

And it didn't help that in early February U.S. Treasury Department officials initially said they might eliminate the 30-year government bond as part of an overall debt-reduction program. That caused bond prices to rally. Just a few days later, the Treasury backtracked on that statement, and bond prices slumped.

But while bonds have been misbehaving lately, they still belong in most investors' portfolios, experts said. It's just a matter of matching the bonds to your investing goals and riding out temporary downturns.

"The problem is that no advice is going to work out" every year, said Ken Dunn, managing director of MAS in West Conshohocken, Pa.

There are, he said, two basic uses for bonds: to cushion a portfolio against falling stock prices and to provide income.

Generally, a mix of government bonds, those issued by the federal government and its agencies, and corporate bonds will provide higher yields. You can buy individual bonds or bond mutual funds, which, like stock funds, let investors buy a portion of a portfolio of bonds.

Over the long run, the right kind of bonds will cushion a portfolio, but that doesn't mean bonds are as safe as bank accounts. Bonds do lose value, sometimes at the same time as stocks. So what's the point in owning bonds?

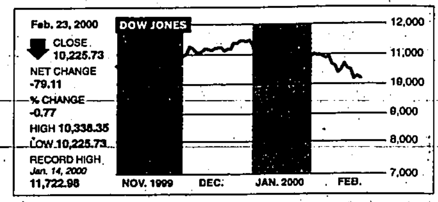

For some investors, there is none. These are typically aggressive investors who won't need the money for 10 years or more. Over periods that long, stocks tend to hold their value. But in between, the ups and downs can tie even the calmest stomachs in knots. That's where bonds and cash come in. Think of them as stock market Maalox.

"In the very long run, you wouldn't necessarily want to think about having bonds in your portfolio, except that, in the long run, you're dead," said Paul A. McCulley, portfolio manager of Pimco's Short Term Fund in Newport Beach, Calif. "Stocks plus bonds will give you a better outcome overall of both long-term growth as well as minimizing short-term volatility."

For example, in the 43 years ended in 1998, a portfolio of 100 percent stocks would have lost 26.5 percent in its worst year. But a portfolio of 60 percent stocks, 30 percent bonds and 10 percent cash would have lost just 13.4 percent in its worst year, according to Ibbotson Associates, a Chicago data provider.

That's still painful, even more when you realize that there's a price to be paid for that kind of protection – lower returns over the long run. The pure stock portfolio earned an average of 11.9 percent a year, compared with 10.1 percent for the lower-risk portfolio.

Deciding how much to invest in bonds depends on your investing time horizon and on how well you tolerate risk. Plenty of Web sites, including those run by major mutual-fund families, can help you decide how to divvy up your portfolio between stocks and bonds.

Tech stocks rally pushes Nasdaq to a new record

NEW YORK (AP) – A huge rally in technology stocks Wednesday gave the Nasdaq composite index its biggest one-day point gain – but the high-tech advance offered no help to big industrial stocks.

The technology-focused Nasdaq composite closed up 168.21 at 4,550.33, a new closing high that surpassed the previous record of 4,548.92 set last Thursday. Meanwhile, the Dow Jones industrial average, which seesawed in and out of positive territory late in the session, ended the day down 79.11 at 10,225.73.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 8.52 to 1,360.69.

Demand for technology stocks that wavered on Tuesday returned in Wednesday's session, especially after Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan told a congressional committee that high stock prices weren't driving the Fed's interest rate policy.

"The total craze for technology stocks has gripped this market, and that situation remains in control," said Ricky Harrington, senior vice president at Wachovia Securities in Charlotte, N.C. Harrington said.

Harrington noted that Wednesday's rally was fed by so-called "second-line technology stocks" instead of the household name technology companies that have traditionally commanded investors' attention.

"The strength has moved down a notch," he said.

Cisco Systems, which rose 14 11/16 to 138.625, Sun Microsystems, up 6.625 at 94.625, and 3Com, up 6.75 at 77.625, led the rally, while the traditional technology bellwethers – Microsoft, which gained 7/16 to 94.25, Dell Computer, up 1 9/16 at 41.375, and Intel, up 2 5/16 at 109 1/16 – stayed out of the limelight.

Investors have returned to a familiar trading pattern that has characterized the stock markets for months, in which technology stocks simply dominate all other sectors.

Stock market is best bet for education plan

By Gail MarksJarvis
Knight Ridder News Service

QUESTION: I would like to open Roth IRAs for my two granddaughters who are in college, but I want to make sure they save the money for retirement and don't take it out of the Roth before then. In your column on Roth IRAs, you said a person could take out the original $2,000 contribution. I figure that if I put the money into a CD that won't mature for years, I could discourage my granddaughters from taking the money out. Will that work? I want to do something that's easy.

ANSWER: It might work, if your grandchildren don't realize that they could cash the CD and pay a penalty. But if they are really determined to get their hands on the money, a CD won't stop them.

If your goal is to give your grandchildren retirement money, the stock market is a better investment than a CD for people in their late teens or early 20s. You want their retirement savings to grow at a rate that will outpace inflation.

Some grandparents worry about losing money in the stock market, but even if a long recession were to occur, your grandchildren would have years to recover from a downturn in the market before they retired. Since the 1920s, an investment in the stock market has gone up 11 percent a year on average, which means that over time the increases in the market make up for the downturns.

If you said your granddaughter would need the money within five years, a CD would be more appropriate. Then you wouldn't want to chance the fluctuations in the stock market. But look at the difference an investment in stocks versus a CD could do for her retirement.

Let's assume your granddaughter is 18, and that you would be lucky enough to find a CD that would pay 8 percent until she turns 65. When she retired, your $2,000 would be $80,420. But assume, instead, that you put the money in an index fund, which mimics the stock market, and it provided an 11 percent return a year. Your $2,000 would be $299,594 when your granddaughter is 65.

An easy approach would be to call a mutual fund company such as Fidelity or Vanguard and ask for a "total stock market" index fund. You would fill out a form with your granddaughter's name and Social Security number and mail the form and a $2,000 check. Then the money could simply sit in the fund and earn a return until your granddaughter withdrew it.

With a Roth IRA, she'd be able to take all the money out at 59 1/2 without a penalty, or she could allow it to keep earning a return indefinitely. If she needed the money for education or for a first house she could withdraw money earlier without a penalty.

If you are determined to keep the money out of your grandchildren's reach, you could establish a trust, rather than a Roth IRA

But setting up trusts is not easy, and you will need to consult an estate planning attorney.

Seminis announced Tuesday a global cost-saving initiative designed to increase profitability by streamlining operations, increasing utilization of facilities and improving efficiencies.

The first phase focuses on its North American operations which includes opening of a seed processing, packaging and shipping plant in Oxnard, followed by expansion of the Warden plant.

"These new facilities will give Seminis increased capacity to meet customer needs," the company said. "Seminis will consolidate operations currently based in two facilities in California during this fiscal year and further consolidate operations currently based in two facilities in Idaho in the next fiscal year."

"The positive impact of this initiative is clear," said Seminis President and Chief Operating Officer Alejandro Rodriguez in a statement.

"After making nine acquisitions since 1994 and nearly five years of intense integration of our global operations, this initiative demonstrates Seminis' commitment to capitalize on our global position and extensive resources."

FAREWELL TO WINTER!

Bobby Wolff

"We often get in quicker by the back door than by the front."
—Napoleon I

"I lost the game because of fluky distribution," explained South. "The odds against a 6-1 club break were nearly 14-1. Even worse, the outstanding trump was in the hand with the singleton club."

South was indeed unlucky to lose to a club ruff. However, he missed a sure shot at making game. Can you spot it?

South opened an all-purpose two clubs and jumped to the heart game after North promised little more than a club suit (three hearts would have been nonforcing). With values for a positive response, North would have bid three clubs at his first turn.

South won the opening club lead with his ace and saw only the quick way to score his 10th winner. He cashed his trump ace, led another trump to dummy's 10, and discarded his losing spade on the club king. Unluckily, West ruffed and shifted to spades. South ruffed, but he could not avoid losing three diamond tricks, sending the game one down.

To cinch his game, at trick two, South should cash his diamond ace and concede a diamond. If East wins, cashes his spade ace, and leads a club, South discards a diamond. West ruffs, but South's game is secure. South can ruff his last diamond in dummy, and the defenders win only three tricks.

Note that the "slow route" not only cinches South's game, but also leaves the door open for an overtrick when West cannot ruff the second club.

ANSWER: Five clubs. North's failure to bid two no-trump signifies he has no wasted heart values. His honor cards must therefore be "fitters," and the club game should be a good bet.
